PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 9, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. James F. Mackin, of St. Paul's Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Amen. We pray Thee, O God of might, wisdom, and justice, through whom authority is rightly administered, laws are enacted, and judgments decreed, assist with Thy holy spirit of counsel and fortitude the President of these United States, that his administration may be conducted in justice and righteousness and be eminently useful to Thy people over whom he presides.

Let the light of Thy divine wisdom direct the deliberations of Congress and shine forth in all the proceedings and laws framed for our rule and benefit, so that they may tend to the preservation of peace, the promotion of national happiness, the increase of industry, sobriety, and useful knowledge, and that they may perpetuate to us the blessings of equal liberty.

We pray Thee, O God of mercy and love, to bring peace to the warring nations of this world, that they may have that peace which the world can not give. Give to Thy servants disposition to keep Thy commandments, so that the fear of our enemies may be removed and our days with Thy protection may be spent in peace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, under the general rules of the House this is pension day. The pension bills are a part of the Private Calendar. On yesterday, I believe, or the day before, an order was made to take up the Private Calendar to-day, but I do not understand that the intention was to displace the right of the Pension Committee. However, I ask unanimous consent that the two pension bills, H. R. 16290 and S. 5911, be taken up and considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 16290, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up a pension bill and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill will in all probability be the last omnibus pension bill considered by the House at this session of Congress, on account of the appropriation bills and other very important measures that must be passed before adjournment, which all of us hope will not be delayed many weeks.

With the passage of this bill the House will have passed at this session 10 omnibus bills which contain 2,120 individual bills for pensions or increases of pensions for that many soldiers, or their widows and children. This is an average of about five for each congressional district represented in this House, but in many districts, especially in the South, there are but few soldiers and but few requests for special bills, and this has enabled those of us who have a great number of soldiers and many meritorious applications for increases to secure a much more liberal share than the average would indicate.

I am a member of three other committees, namely, the Committee on Flood Control, Insular Affairs, and Elections. All of these are important, and I take an active part and feel a deep interest in the work before them, but I have also taken not only an active but a leading part in the work of this, the Invalid Pensions Committee. I was first placed upon this committee about nine years ago by Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, while he was Speaker of the House, and following the invariable rule and custom was, of course, placed at the foot of the list of 16 members. By reason of the death or retirement of Members who were then above me, I am now second upon that committee, and at the request of Gen. SHERWOOD, the chairman, I am to-day and usually have been the acting chairman of the committee, which has put me in position to render great assistance to many of the old soldiers and their widows in all parts of the country, but especially in my own district.

During my service I introduced and succeeded in getting passed a bill providing for an automatic increase for all soldiers when they reach the higher age that entitles them to such increase. Under the old law they had to file a new application on reaching the higher age and frequently at great expense and inconvenience, and the increase did not begin until the new application was filed, which was oftentimes overlooked and delayed. Now, under my bill, no new application is necessary and the increase begins the day the soldier reaches the higher age.

I also actively assisted in securing the passage of the law providing for payment to the soldiers by checks promptly forwarded to them at the end of each quarter without the requirement of vouchers as formerly, which caused considerable trouble and sometimes expense and delay. Under this law the soldiers get their money sooner and with less trouble and expense.

I also actively assisted in the enactment of the Sherwood law that has increased the pension of every soldier in my district and in the country. Gen. SHERWOOD, at the time the bill was passed, wrote me a letter thanking me for the assistance I gave him in securing the passage of that bill.

I have also introduced, and hope before my service in Congress ends to get passed, a bill providing for the payment of all pensions monthly instead of quarterly. Many of the old soldiers and their widows are poor and need their pensions to obtain the necessaries of life, and could no doubt obtain them to better advantage and at less cost for cash than when required to buy them upon a credit of three months' time, as many of them now are forced to do.

I have also made a hard fight in trying to secure pensions for the Missouri State Militia, many of whom fought side by side with the Regular troops and rendered the same service in defense of the Union. I once succeeded in getting a favorable report upon this bill from the committee, of which I am a member, but was not able to get consideration of it at that session of Congress, and soon afterwards the European war came up and so reduced the revenues of the Government that it became necessary to levy a war tax to pay current expenses. On that account it has since been impossible to get this bill favorably considered either by the committee or the House. However, I still hope that when the European war is over and the finances of the Government again become normal that I may be able to get this just measure considered and passed.

Mr. Speaker, I have always contended and believe now that this Government owes a debt of gratitude to the Union soldiers of the Civil War that it can never adequately pay. They left the comforts, the pleasures, and the safety of home, and assumed the hardships, the trials, and the dangers of war to fight for the preservation of the Union. By their bravery and heroism their cause was won. Money will not now fully repay them for their suffering or their valor, but a grateful country can and should see to it that no one of the faithful and brave old soldiers whose services contributed to the victory should ever suffer either for the necessaries or the comforts of life.

Every morning when this House opens its session we are forcibly reminded of the great personal sacrifice made, and of the suffering endured, by many of those who participated in the struggles of the Civil War. The beautiful and impressive daily prayers of our popular blind Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, uttered with so much fervency and devotion, fall upon our attentive ears with a sort of a feeling on our part that they must be inspired from above. He was a brave Union soldier and lost his eyes in the bloody battle of Franklin, Tenn., on account of the premature explosion of a cannon. Rev. Dr. Couden is a Republican in politics, but to the credit of the Democratic Members of the House in this and the two preceding Congresses, he has been nominated as Chaplain by three Democratic caucuses and unanimously elected by the House. We love to honor him, and feel that in doing so we honor ourselves.

The soldiers of the Civil War are rapidly passing away, usually at the rate of more than a hundred per day, and whatever is to be done for their relief or comfort by a grateful Government this side of the grave must be extended within the next few years.

My eldest brother fought on the side of the South as a natural result of the environments that surrounded him. I honor his memory and commend his valor, as I do all of those who stood with him in that great conflict fighting for what they believed was right, but I am glad to-day that the Union was preserved, and that we now have one country, one people, and one flag. I am glad that I have been in a position to assist many of the noble and deserving old veterans of that great war, to whom we are all indebted for the services they rendered in the great battles for the preservation of the Union. I will continue to do what I can for their comfort and pleasure as long as I remain in public life.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following new paragraph:

"The name of Artemas C. Barclay, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I present the following information in support of the foregoing amendment:

H. R. 8886, Artemas C. Barclay, aged 65 years, late first-class boy, United States Navy, from February 6, 1864, to August 5, 1865; August 30, 1870, to February 7, 1872; length of service in Civil War, one year six months, and is now pensioned under certificate No. 11583 at the rate of $16.50 per month.

The claimant was formerly pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at the rate of $12 for double inguinal hernia, left varicocele, and fracture of left tibia; increased to $14.50 and to $16.50, the latter rate commencing August 4, 1914.

Medical testimony presented this committee indicates that claimant is totally unfitted for manual labor by reason of the disabilities above enumerated, arteriosclerosis, piles, rheumatism, and impaired vision.

Further testimony indicates that he has no income from any source except his pension, which it is recommended be increased to $36 per month.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 63, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to sell skins taken from fur seals killed on the Pribilof Islands for food purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 63. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is a similar Senate joint resolution, which has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate joint resolution 47 for House joint resolution 63.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to consider Senate joint resolution 47 in lieu of the House joint resolution 63. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 47) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to sell skins taken from fur seals killed on the Pribilof Islands for food purposes.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell all skins taken from seals killed on the Pribilof Islands for food purposes under section 11 of the act of August 24, 1912, in such market, at such times, and in such manner as he may deem most advantageous, and the proceeds of such sale or sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House joint resolution 63 will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the following letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce is explanatory of the resolution:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 31, 1916.

MY DEAR JUDGE ALEXANDER: In response to your request for certain information regarding the Alaskan sealskins that have been sold or are to be sold in this country, I invite your attention to the following reference to this subject in my annual report for 1914:

"The annual shipment of sealskins was made in August, 1913, on the chartered vessel that carried supplies to the islands. Up to that year the sales of Alaska skins had always been made in London. The department, however, felt that economic and other considerations justified the attempt to establish an American market for this strictly American product, which is largely used by the American public. It was therefore decided to initiate the selling of the Government's fur-seal skins in this country, and satisfactory arrangements to this end were made with the firm of Funsten Bros. & Co., of St. Louis. The available skins numbered 2,296, of which 1,896 were sold at public auction in St. Louis on December 16, 1913. The remaining 400 skins were withdrawn from sale at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, House of Representatives, and these skins were unsold at the close of the fiscal year. The gross proceeds of the sale were $54,579, an average price of $28.786 per skin; the net proceeds were about $50,950. Taking into consideration the extremely unsettled condition of the general fur trade of the world and the rather poor quality of the skins as a whole, the outcome was regarded as satisfactory. The sale was attended by many buyers from Europe and America and attracted much attention."

In the fiscal year 1914–15, owing to the continued depression in the fur trade throughout the world, the department questioned the desirability of disposing of the skins taken for the food purposes of the natives during that year and took up the matter with Congress, with the result that by joint resolution approved February 24, 1915, the Secretary of Commerce was authorized to postpone the sale of all sealskins then in the possession of the Government until such time as, in his discretion, he deemed it advisable. Under this authority the skins in question have not been disposed of, and the take of skins of the year 1915 has since been received.

The skins now on hand awaiting sale are as follows:

1913 consignment (withheld from sale at request of House Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce)	400

Under the pending joint resolution authority is given to postpone the sale of the 1915 skins which otherwise must be disposed of by June 30, 1916, at a time when there is practically no market, when no grading and advertisement of the skins have been possible, and under conditions that necessarily involve a large financial sacrifice; and authority is given also to sell, at the discretion of the department, the skins that may hereafter be acquired.

It is strongly urged that this joint resolution, which passed the Senate a number of months ago, be adopted by the House at once, not only because of the money loss to the Government that will result from a sale at this time, but also because of another important consideration, namely, that the department has entered into an arrangement for establishing in this country a plant for the dressing and dyeing of seal (and other) skins, and some of the sealskins in question are now in various stages of dressing, unhairing, dyeing, etc., so that their sale in their present condition is wholly impracticable. The effect of this arrangement, whose success appears to be assured, is to put in American control the entire fur-seal industry, to bring to this country a highly specialized branch of trade that has heretofore been confined to London, and to save to our people a large amount of unnecessary expense which has hitherto been borne by them because of dependence upon a foreign market for the raw, dressed, and dyed product.

It is expected that the first sale of dressed and dyed sealskins will be held in the early fall of 1916, and that subsequent sales will occur at regular intervals, in accordance with the practice of the fur trade.

Very truly, yours,

E. F. SWEET, Acting Secretary.

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER,
Chairman Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. What is it about?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by Mr. Lincoln, of Boston, on the merchant marine, and also some remarks of his own. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including therein a speech made by Senator HARDING, of Ohio, as temporary chairman of the Republican convention at Chicago day before yesterday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the platform adopted at the Republican convention.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the Republican national platform adopted yesterday at Chicago. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the merchant marine.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for not more than two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, apparently there is something wrong with the enlistments in the Army and Navy of the country. We had some discussion of this matter while the Army reorganization bill and the naval bill were under consideration in the House; and because of the desire for information on that subject, I took pains to inquire of the two departments as to the number of men actually enlisted in the service. I want to lay the replies before the House.

We have had great preparedness parades, and the newspapers have been full of "preparedness" for a year past; indeed, the preparedness agitation has been at its height. It would appear, if there was any inducement for the young men of the country to enlist in their country's service, that inducement had been made. The returns, however, are surprisingly small, as appears from the statements which I shall submit. The returns from the large cities are not what might be expected of them, in view of all that has been said and done about preparedness.

As a matter of fact, the men offering themselves for service as enlisted men in the Navy are not much in excess of 8,000 for the whole country for the five months from January up to the end of May. The number of men separated from the service meanwhile leaves the net enlistments for the five months at only 1,743.

During two months of the present year over 4,000 men who enlisted for service in the Army separated themselves from the service, while during the four months from January to April, inclusive, only 8,164 offered themselves for service throughout the entire country. Now, it may be that men do not enlist because they are not getting enough money——

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have but two minutes, but I will yield.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman realize there is a great demand for men in the industries of the country on account of the prosperity in the country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be one reason why men are not enlisting for this patriotic service. It is rather anomalous that when appeals are made for men to enlist in the service of the country so very few respond. There must be a good reason for all this.

If the inducement is not sufficient, Congress should take some cognizance of it and find out what the trouble is. If I had my way about it, I would provide that no man in the service of the Army or Navy should receive less than $20 a month. [Applause.]

The figures which I propose to incorporate are authentic, coming from both departments, and I commend them to the attention of Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ARMAMENT AND MEN.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, while the naval affairs appropriation bill was under consideration I criticized the rule which prevented a full discussion of the bill in detail, and particularly that feature of it which related to the pay of the enlisted man. I am of opinion that the $15 or $16 a month which we now pay to the enlisted man in the Navy—and he must be a pretty good specimen of physical manhood at that—is insufficient to induce many young men to waive their other opportunities in life. I feel the same way about the enlisted men of the Army and wish, while we were increasing the armament, we might also have been able to give more encouragement to the young men whom we ask to man our defenses. Congress, however, did not see fit in either instance to offer additional inducements to the type of men required for the Regular Service in the Army and Navy, so that it is not surprising that we are making little headway in inducing enlistments. I presume we will still have regiments short of their full quota, and battleships lacking full crews, until some other means is devised, apart from red fire and speeches, to induce the enlistment of fighting men.

INDUSTRIAL PREPAREDNESS IMPORTANT.

I do not intend to add very much to what I have already said on this subject. The country ought to be prepared against attack on land or sea. We should be industrially prepared as well, and the expenditures we are making for Government-controlled enterprises should be made with some regard to the peace and welfare of the people of the United States, even though Government ownership may have been unduly injected into both the Army and Navy bills.

If we are to be industrially prepared, we must encourage and enter upon such enterprises within the United States as will keep both capital and labor profitably employed. If we are to be prepared for war, which none of us seem to want, we must have a sufficient number of trained men in the Army and Navy to keep up with the equipment we are providing in both directions. For defensive purposes we need men who are trained for action and who are not "too proud to fight." It is obvious that such men are more important for defensive purposes than agitators or others of good-enough intentions who may not be available for service when the country needs men.

ENLISTMENTS ARE NOT HEAVY.

In this connection it is somewhat surprising that although the agitation for preparedness has filled the newspapers and public halls for over a year and Congress has been flooded with petitions on the question, the actual number of enlistments in the Army and Navy since the 1st of January last has not been in keeping with even the limited preparedness provisions that have been made in the Army and Navy bills. If the great parades, which the newspapers tell us have included 150,000 men in each of the cities of Chicago and New York, are to be accepted as criterions, how are we to account for the cold fact that from the 1st of January to the 31st of May the total number of enlistments in the whole United States was only 1,743 men more than the number of men discharged from the service during the same period? Or how are we to understand that during the first two months of 1916 there were separated from the service in the Army more than half the total number of men enlisting for the four months of January, February, March, and April? These facts are not my own. They are taken from officials reports of the War and Navy Departments.

When the world is supposed to be afire, and the United States is aroused to its highest sense of interest, there must be some reason for the backwardness of enthusiastic patriots to come forward for real fighting service. It may be that better employment awaits the average American youth elsewhere. If his pay in the Army or Navy is too small it might be well to raise it. If my views should prevail, the enlisted man in either branch of the service would receive not less than $20 per month.

NAVY ENLISTMENTS, FIVE MONTHS, 8,333 MEN.

As showing the trend of enlistments, compared with discharges in the Navy, for the five months from January to May, inclusive, and while the preparedness agitation has been at its height, I append the following letter from the Secretary of the Navy:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 3, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. MOORE: The department has received your letter of May 26, 1916, requesting information regarding the enlisted personnel of the Navy. The department will answer categorically the questions submitted:

ARMY ENLISTMENTS, FOUR MONTHS, 8,164 MEN.

Enlistments in the Army have been computed in the War Department for the four months from January 1 to April 30, 1916, inclusive. In submitting data from The Adjutant General, I call attention particularly to the separation of enlisted men from the service for the two months of January and February. The figures herewith presented certainly do not show any abnormal increase in the number of young men offering their services to the country under existing conditions. The Adjutant General's memorandum follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 27, 1916.

1. The number of enlistments for the Army from January 1 to April 30, 1916, date of the latest report, is 8,164.

2. The total number of separations of enlisted men from the service for January and February, 1916, is approximately 4,421. The returns received since February are incomplete, and it is impossible to make even an approximate estimate of the separations since that time.

3. The areas of recruiting districts are not specifically defined. Besides the stations in the city of Philadelphia, that district has recruiting stations in Pottsville, Pa., Trenton, N. J., and Wilmington, Del. The urban and suburban country adjacent to those cities is canvassed by members of the Philadelphia party. The number of acceptances in that district from January 1 to April 30, 1916, is 237.

4. The number of acceptances within the same period in the districts named are as follows: Boston, 84; New York, 895; Baltimore, 116.

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman what his objection is to this bill? These people were in charge of this lighthouse during the storm that washed away everything on the island, and they lost their lives. The property originally inventoried at $1,200 and some odd. We have reduced that amount because there were certain things there like a graphophone, and similar articles, that we thought we ought not to put in.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, some time ago there was a great storm down at Apia, Samoan Islands——

Mr. HARRISON. This is Horn Island.

Mr. MANN. There was a great storm at Apia, Samoa, and there were some naval vessels driven out to sea, and I believe possibly one of them was lost. Congress passed a bill to reimburse the men and officers on that vessel for the loss of their personal belongings. It was a very exceptional case, and it appealed very strongly to the sympathies of everybody in the country. Congress having passed that bill, everybody in the Government service seemed to think that the Government of the United States was the insurer of their private belongings, and that if they met any loss it was our business to reimburse them.

I do not take that view of it at all. The Government does not insure this property. These people all have the right to insure it themselves. We just passed over one bill to reimburse a lot of men in the Engineer Corps of the Army, and there are pending before the Committee on Claims quite a number of bills to do the same thing. I do not think that we insure them.

I will say to the gentleman that when I was a member or chairman—I have forgotten which—of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I introduced a bill and urged its passage to reimburse a lot of people in the Lighthouse Service, the Lighthouse Service coming under the jurisdiction of that committee. We were carried away by sympathy for those people. But I have changed my opinion. I do not think that we are the insurers of private belongings, wholly personal in their nature, of people in the Government service; and while I have the greatest of sympathy for the lighthouse keeper who loses his belongings or for a man in the Army or the Navy or in any other branch of the Government service whose property is destroyed by storm or fire, still I do not think we insure for those men their property. If you pass this bill, you can not stop the others. That is the sole reason.

Mr. HARRISON. I think this is a little different from the other bills.

Mr. MANN. It has strong equities in it, but I do not see how you can draw the line.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman will permit me, here are some islands about 10 miles from the land. No one except Government officials live there, and there are very few of those. This man was the keeper of a lighthouse, and he stayed there until the last.

Mr. MANN. I know what the case is.

Mr. HARRISON. It was the most violent storm ever known in that section of the country. The lighthouse was swept away. The man and his daughter were killed. The widow, who is to be benefited by the bill, had $1,200 worth of stuff, all in the world that they did have, and the bill only carries $600. The bill is really exceptional in its character.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how you can draw the line. The man and his wife both lost their lives and their property. We have a case here where we are asked to pay for chickens, lost by storm, belonging to a lighthouse keeper.

Mr. HARRISON. There are two of those bills. Both are in small amounts. I hope the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, did allow a bill of that kind.

Mr. MANN. I introduced a bill of that kind, but it did not go to my committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. I can not let it go by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

RELIEF OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we passed a bill providing for the payment of claims for carrying the mails prior to the Civil War, the bill (H. R. 11150) for the relief of mail contractors. The next bill is a mail-contract bill. There are 40 such bills on the Private Calendar. I want to ask to be permitted to indicate to the Clerk those bills, and ask that they be stricken from the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to indicate those bills to the Clerk.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to strike them from the calendar, would it not be better to recommit them to the committee?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Suppose, then, Mr. Speaker, that we simply indicate them, and ask that all such bills be passed over and remain on the calendar. It will save time.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to indicate to the Clerk the claims for carrying mails prior to the Civil War.

Mr. MANN. Let him give the numbers to the Clerk and have them reported, so that the Clerk will have a record, and then ask unanimous consent that they be passed over.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no necessity of reading the list.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; so that there will be a record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the Clerk would indicate them on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. The list can easily be read. They can be read by number.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the list.

The Clerk read as follows:

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next one.

PETER M'KAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1376) for the relief of Peter McKay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

DR. E. V. HAILMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3145) for the relief of Dr. E. V. Hailman.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

BERNARD A. SCHAAF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8267) to place Bernard A. Schaaf on the retired list of the Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH] whether in his opinion this case is so exceptional in character that it will not be taken as a precedent?

Mr. CHURCH. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it seems to be a case of the very greatest importance viewed from a patriotic standpoint and from the standpoint of humanity. I think the gentleman understands the history of the case. Mr. Bernard Schaaf enlisted as a private in the United States Army——

Mr. MANN. I remember the case. Of course I am not trying to cross-examine the gentleman. He will understand that. But I would like to have his opinion as to whether he thinks that if we pass this bill it can be taken as a precedent by everybody else who wants to be put on the retired list with the rank, pay, and allowances of some noncommissioned officer.

Mr. CHURCH. I do not see why it should be taken as a precedent in any way. As the gentleman well knows, the conference-report provision on the military bill, section 26, covers almost all cases of this kind.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so at all.

Mr. CHURCH. I may be a little broad in that statement.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it covers a case like this at all, or it would not be necessary to pass this bill.

Mr. CHURCH. I will say to the gentleman that there is only a technical reason why that provision of the conference report does not cover this particular case.

Mr. MANN. Why, no; the provision of the conference report, as I recall it, does not cover a case like this at all; to put on the retired list a man who was a lieutenant in the Philippine Scouts, and who was not entitled to retirement, as a master signal electrician, which, of course, he never was.

Mr. CHURCH. There are three classes that are covered.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to get the gentleman to say whether he thought this bill if passed would make a precedent.

Mr. CHURCH. I do not think it will be taken as a precedent. I am quite sure it will not be.

Mr. SISSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the report states that this case is not covered by any statute of retirement. What are the facts, other than those stated in the report, as to the service of this man?

Mr. CHURCH. Bernard Schaaf enlisted as a private in the United States Army away back in 1903. After he had served in that capacity he was sent to the Philippine Islands and was appointed a second lieutenant in the Philippine Scouts in 1908. He served in that capacity as a second lieutenant for a period of four years. On account of his efficient work he was promoted in 1912 to be a first lieutenant in the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. SISSON. What is his condition now?

Mr. CHURCH. While serving in that capacity he became insane. He was brought here and is now in St. Elizabeth's Hospital, and the doctors pronounce him incurably insane. He has a wife, and she works as a domestic over here in Maryland in order to support herself, and to carry to him—twice a week or oftener—some little necessities that she thinks he does not receive at the hospital.

Mr. SISSON. What is the salary of a master signal electrician?

Mr. CHURCH. I can not say exactly; but it is between $80 and $90.

Mr. SISSON. A month?

Mr. CHURCH. A month.

Mr. SISSON. I withdraw any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to place Bernard A. Schaaf, formerly first sergeant of Company K, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, and later a lieutenant of Philippine Scouts, on the retired list of the Army with the rank, pay, and allowance of a master signal electrician: Provided, That in computing the soldier's pay credit shall be given for all his continuous service in the Army.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EVA M. BOWMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 136) for the relief of Eva M. Bowman.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Eva M. Bowman, widow of Robert L. Bowman, who was killed in the discharge of his duty as Indian agent.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,460."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MRS. GEORGE A. MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 142) for the relief of Mrs. George A. Miller.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $108.50 to Mrs. George A. Miller, on account of money expended by her husband in defending a suit brought against him growing out of his effort to enforce the law against selling liquor to Indians.

THOMAS J. BYE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11377) for the relief of Thomas J. Bye.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Thomas J. Bye, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500, in full settlement of his claim against the Government of the United States by reason of the loss of his team of horses through drowning while employed on Government work under the supervision of Government officials.

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, although I shall not object, I want to call attention in this connection to the peculiar attitude of the committee in regard to matters of this sort. The committee in this case has allowed $500 for the loss of a team of horses because they were lost while employed on Government work under the supervision of Government officials. Now, I introduced a bill some time ago asking the very modest sum of $50 for the loss of a horse hired by the Government and killed while being used by the Government by falling from a mountain cliff on a very bad trail. An adverse report was made by the committee a few days ago because—and that is the only reason of the adverse report so far as I know—the department of the Government using the horse said there was no negligence on the part of any employee of the Government in the matter. It is not claimed that there was in this case.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, negligence of a sort. I was told that the committee did not feel justified in approving the $50 claim for the loss of a horse because the department had not recommended it. The department did not disapprove it; they simply said there was no negligence on the part of the Government. While it was not claimed that there was any special negligence, the horse was hired to the Government for work in the mountains, using him in the mountains on the dangerous trails, and he slipped and was killed.

I have been unable to determine just what theory the committee followed in this case. I do not object to an adverse report in the case of a horse that was valued at $50 and the favorable report in the case of the team valued at $500, or to the favorable report in the case of another saddle horse valued at $75, if there is any essential difference in the cases; but I do not think there is any essential difference. The difference seems to be entirely in regard to the attitude of the bureau or department using the animal. If they are favorably disposed to the payment in one case, the committee follows their recommendation. If not favorably disposed, that settles it, as far as the committee is concerned. It does not occur to me that that is a proper attitude for a committee of this House to assume in regard to matters of this kind—to regularly follow the recommendations of the department.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, of course I know nothing of the particular merits of the gentleman's propositions which have not been before the House, but clearly they are differentiated from this bill, which is a case where a man was hauling stone for the Government at the canal in Michigan, and was directed to haul the stone over the canal in the wintertime when it was frozen, and was informed by a Government official that the ice was 9 inches or a foot thick, and that it was perfectly safe to travel on the ice. The Government official who gave the information was mistaken. The ice was not that thick; it was not safe to travel over; and the man lost his team and was in luck that he did not lose his life through the legal negligence on the part of an official of the Government.

If the gentleman from Wyoming has any such case, he will have no difficulty in getting the committee to report it.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me that if that constitutes negligence, the case I referred to constitutes negligence. In the case I referred to they were using this horse in a mountainous country making surveys. They thought that a certain trail was safe, as they thought that the ice in this other case was safe. As a matter of fact the trail was not safe; it gave way, taking the horse down the mountain side and killing him.

Mr. MANN. Even I, who do not live in a mountainous country, know that when I travel over a trail in a mountainous country I take chances, and when a man takes a horse over it he knows it, too. The man was taking no chances in hauling stone in a perfectly safe place—the situation is entirely different.

Mr. MONDELL. The man in this case knew he was hauling stone on the ice, and it was only a question how thick it was.

Mr. MANN. He was hauling stone and was directed to take this stone across the ice, where it was just as safe, if the statement was correct, and safer, probably, than it would have been on a rough road; certainly safer than traveling over a mountain trail.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand, then, that the difference is that the Government is responsible if it is ice and is not responsible if it is rock.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in response to what the gentleman has just said, I will state that my recollection is that the record shows that the Government authorities in charge of this work examined this ice, bored through it, and told this man that it was perfectly safe. He went on the ice under their instructions, following their orders, and his horse was lost. I think that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], in his statement a few moments ago, gave the real reason that impelled the committee to act as it did in regard to his matter, when he said that in the case in which he is interested there was no claim of negligence on the part of any Government official. That is why the committee refused to pass his bill, which has been referred to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend that I hope I have some legislative conscience, and I do not assert a claim that I do not think is clear and definite and properly based. My judgment is that when the Government hires a horse for a certain kind of use, whether in the mountains or on the ice, and the horse is used for that purpose, there is no negligence on the part of the Government if in the ordinary use of the animal he is injured or killed. If the committee takes the position that it only allows claims when gentlemen assert that there has been negligence, even though the facts do not bear out the claim, I fear those of us who do not want to assert claims not borne out by the facts will not have many of our bills reported.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. But the question of negligence might arise in regard to the use to which the horse was put.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not believe there is any negligence in the case we are now discussing—negligence in the sense that would make the Government legally responsible if the Government were a private individual. That is what I meant when I said I did not make the claim that the Government officials were negligent. I do not think they were negligent in this case to an extent that would have made an individual legally responsible. These cases are equity cases, purely, and the equity is just as strong, just as great in the case to which I have referred of the horse that was lost on the mountain trail, as in the case of the horse that was lost on the ice. The only difference is that in one case there was a department disposed to pay and in the other case there was a department absolutely indifferent. I have introduced two bills, one introduced at the request of the people who lost the horse, the other introduced at the request of the Geological Survey, both for a horse killed while in the use of the survey, one favorably reported and the other unfavorably reported, and as far as I can learn no reason for the difference in treatment except that in the one case the department for some reason or other was anxious to pay, and anxious to the extent of sending me a bill and having it introduced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I will gladly yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in the other case they were entirely indifferent in regard to it. In order that in the latter case there should not be any question about the payment, I advised the people to put the value of the animal very low. They insisted that it was worth $100. I introduced a bill for $50, believing that by being reasonable and more than reasonable I could get favorable consideration for a case that was certainly as good as the other case that was sent me with a request that I introduce the bill, which went through the committee without any difficulty at all, without any appearance or effort on my part.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the committee saw a great difference in the facts in the two cases and therefore reported one favorably and the other unfavorably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GOTTLOB SCHLECT AND MAURICE D. HIGGINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12742) for the relief of Gottlob Schlect and Maurice D. Higgins and for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Valentine Brasch.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Gottlob Schlect, $1,000; to Maurice D. Higgins, $1,000; to Margaret Krone, remarried widow of Valentine Brasch, $400; to Emily Brasch Kingsley, $200; to Charles Brasch, $200; and to Kate Brasch, $200: Provided, That no agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any persons engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting this claim shall, directly or indirectly, receive or retain for such service in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim, or for any act whatsoever in connection with this claim, any fee or compensation whatsoever.

With the following committee amendment:

With the following committee amendments:

Line 6, after the word "in," insert the word "Independent," and in line 7 strike out the words "Independent Regiment."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRESTON B. C. LUCAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5091) for the relief of Preston B. C. Lucas.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Preston B. C. Lucas the sum of $500, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; I will withhold the objection.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I did not notice that the gentleman from Oregon was present.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill just read is to pay the claim of Preston B. C. Lucas, which claim arose in this way: He settled upon a quarter section of land, and after completing his term of residence on it and making the improvements prescribed by law, he obtained a patent to the land. Before he made his settlement he took extraordinary precautions to determine the boundaries of the piece of land, because on the northern portion of it there was a little strip of bottom land on which he wished to construct his buildings and improvements and make his clearing.

There had been in 1878 a survey of this tract of land, which survey had been accepted by the Government, but in the course of time the survey marks were obliterated and became uncertain. The Government ordered a resurvey of this tract of land in 1898, which was not uncommon, because some of the early surveys were erroneous—the early surveyors having made mistakes, and in other cases the blazes and corner marks became indistinguishable. I know of a number of instances where new surveys were made, and in such cases the new surveys have been adhered to, so far as my memory now serves.

The corners and boundaries under the new survey Mr. Lucas regarded as correct, and had no reason for thinking otherwise. The second survey was paid for by the Government, accepted, and approved, which indicated to the mind of anyone applying for land in that section that the original survey was held erroneous by the Government and the new survey was to be the true survey. Later an inspector went over the surveys, however, and decided that the former survey was the correct one, and so reported to the office here in Washington, which held that the former survey was the survey which should be followed in fixing the boundaries of the land. Now, this was after the land had been patented to Mr. Lucas.

When a man goes on a piece of land to make settlement he goes over the land and does not select a particular quarter section in a theoretical way on the map, but selects a quarter section as it is marked out on the ground by the Government survey. It has four corners definitely located by well-established marks, with blazed or marked lines connecting them.

He went over this land. He followed the Government's second survey. He decided this piece of land was the piece of land he wished as it was then on the Government plat and as it was then shown on the ground by the Government marks of the second survey. The change in the north line after patent had been issued to him caused him to lose all of his improvements. He tried the case in the local court and the court determined in his favor. In addition to his improvements he lost his clearing and several acres of land. His loss was much greater than the amount of money provided for in the bill.

I hope the gentleman from Illinois can see his way clear, in view of the fact that what he did was in perfect good faith, that he did everything a man could do or could be expected to do—because the Government issued him a patent—and he took the land as it was marked out on the surface of the earth with blaze marks through the woods and with the corners as clearly indicated by the second survey——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a hard case, and there are many of them. It might be possible when the House is full and considering a bill like this they would be able to differentiate it from an ordinary claim and allow it. I do not undertake to say. I can remember when I was a small boy one of my earliest recollections now is my father had a farm in McLean County, Ill., and somebody discovered the surveys on which all the farms were based were incorrect and everybody's farm was moved over, everybody in that locality.

Well, they had no claim against the Government. I have run into that character of cases in the city of Chicago where there is a discrepancy in the survey, sometimes based on the original Government survey. The Government does not assume the responsibility of locating a man upon the piece of property, especially where it gives it to him, and of being sure that he puts his improvements upon the location which he made——

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. MANN. And I am not willing to start in by proceeding by unanimous consent to pay these claims.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield on that particular point he mentioned a moment ago?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. In every case where a settler makes settlement on a piece of land the four corners are marked, and the corners are connected by blazed lines, if it is in a wooded country like this is. That is what the Government says that quarter section consists of. He took it upon the marks that the Government had made on the surface of the earth as indicating that particular quarter section, and he put his improvements well within the line that the second survey marked out, and through no fault of his the lines were changed and his improvements were transferred to another party. If he had known the possibility of this in the beginning, without doubt he would not have taken that piece of land, but would have taken the quarter section just north, because on that area was a few acres of bottom land which he desired for his house, barn, and so forth, and first clearing. Therefore he took that particular tract. He has also lost his right to make a homestead entry. He was misled by the Government surveyor. His work, his toil of years, his money that he expended on improving the farm, are all gone to another man, given by the Government without any compensation to him.

Mr. MANN. Oh, his work did not amount to very much; he only asked $500.

Mr. HAWLEY. It amounted to much more than that, but that is all now asked.

Mr. MANN. There was an original Government survey that established the line. Those were the real ones. Subsequently there was a resurvey made on the application of the agent out there, and the resurvey was erroneous.

Mr. HAWLEY. How was he to know that the resurvey was erroneous, and how could the Government say that the first survey was better than the other survey?

Mr. MANN. I do not know that he could know; but his neighbor got a competent surveyor. The Government surveyor, who surveyed under contract, was not.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Lucas was not responsible for the second Government survey, but he had a right to believe this survey to be the correct one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection.

Mr. MANN. I will not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EVERETT H. CORSON.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1358) for the relief of Everett H. Corson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Everett H. Corson, an employee of the Department of the Interior, General Land Office, the sum of $2,000, as full compensation for permanent injuries and damages received by the said Corson in an accident caused by a runaway, without any contributory negligence and while in the discharge of his official duties, on the 23d day of August, 1906; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,237."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the chairman of the committee give us some explanation of this bill. From the reading of it, clearly there seems to be no liability of the Government; but if the statement of the facts will bring it within any of the rules of liability I will be pleased to hear what the chairman has to say as to the facts in the case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the committee has not always held itself down to the strict rules of law in regard to matters of this kind. The gentleman will recall that there are many classes of employees that are entitled to compensation where they are injured while in the employ of the Government, and the question of how the accident occurred does not enter very largely into matters of that kind. Looking to the facts in this case, we found that this man, Mr. Corson, was an employee of the Government; he was actually engaged in his work, and he was very seriously injured while so engaged, in fact, so seriously injured that he suffered for a long, long time and was put to a great deal of expense, amounting to about $750, in doctor bills, and so on. But the purpose of this bill is not to reimburse him for that expense, but simply to allow him the salary that he would have received if he had not been injured but had remained at his post of duty and at work.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Speaker, here is an individual who was injured through no fault of the Government so far as the facts disclosed by the distinguished chairman are concerned, but he was injured outside of his employment by an accident that occured to him, and he comes here and asks an appropriation to be made simply because he was an employee of the Government, without any liability of any character whatever attached to the Government for his injury. Just as well might some one who is riding upon a railroad train where a collision would occur come to Congress and ask for an appropriation to reimburse him for an injury that he might sustain while a passenger on the railroad.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. CULLOP. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I think there is a very clear distinction between the illustration the gentleman made and the facts in this case, when he refers to a man riding on a railroad train. Now, it is clearly set out here that this man was injured, using the very language of the report—and this was an affidavit from the party—"while engaged in the line of duty."

Now, he was actually engaged in his line of work at the time he was injured, which is very different——

Mr. CULLOP. Who owned the team or the instrument by which he was injured?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. He was working for the Government, but I do not believe the Government owned the team. I do not know about that.

Mr. CULLOP. Was the person using the team by which he was injured in the employ of the Government?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes, sir; that is my understanding of it. And this man was going out at the very time, pursuing his regular line of work, and was so injured while going to his work.

Mr. CULLOP. All that might be true and still there would be no liability on the Government. If he has any claim for damages, so far as the statement is made here, his claim is against the man who was driving the team and not against the Government of the United States. Surely it would not be held in any court that the Government of the United States ought to reimburse this man for the injury sustained, however great the injury may be, and however much we all may sympathize with him. But when a precedent of this kind is set that any person injured without the cause being attributed to the Government, but simply because he was an employee and engaged in work, that the Government must pay for the injury, these claims will pile up here from time to time and grow from year to year.

Now, there is no liability of the Government in this matter. This gentleman did not have to work for the Government. He could have taken private employment. He was not compelled to work for the Government, but he remained in its employ, and he was injured outside of any fault of the Government whatever, and it would be manifestly unfair to the people to allow the claim. He should proceed otherwise to recover for his injury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOSEPH J. SCOTT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill may go over for a few moments, so that I can search among the bills on the Speaker's table and ascertain whether there is a Senate bill of the same purport?

Y., by the explosion of gunpowder and 13-inch shell, without his fault or negligence, the sum of $5,000: Provided, That in case of the death of the said Ellen Curran before payment is made the $5,000 shall be paid to the personal representative of and for the benefit of the next of kin.

With the following committee amendments:

LENA GARAGNON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2540) for the relief of Lena Garagnon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief statement with reference to this case. Mrs. Garagnon was run over in the street by a battery of Artillery, which was presumably returning to Fort Sam Houston, its post. The vehicle in which Mrs. Garagnon was riding was smashed, and she was as badly crippled as any person whom I have ever seen. She is hopelessly crippled for life and goes on crutches. She has actually paid out and has receipts for more than $2,500 for doctors' bills, nurses, and hospital expenses. She was treated at home in San Antonio, and subsequently taken to Chicago, where she remained for some months in a hospital called the Mercy Hospital. The Secretary of War, the Surgeon General, and Maj. Reynolds, of the Medical Corps, and other medical officers have testified to the serious nature of her injuries, and the statements of the Secretary of War and others are printed in the report, which is a complete survey of the case. The Secretary of War states that the amount asked for in the bill is not excessive, but even that has been reduced by the committee. The woman has had to borrow money. She owned a butcher's business. She was a widow, and I believe she inherited this business from her husband or her father. She has had to give up all attention to her business, which has been destroyed. She has actually made a cash outlay of $2,500. Other bills have passed here in the last half hour which, it seems to me, make no stronger appeals to justice than does this one. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will see his way clear to withdraw the objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very distressing case. Of course, there is no liability on the part of the Government. We have never allowed any such case as this since I have been in the House. One of the early bills which I introduced in the House grew out of the explosion of a battery during a strike at Chicago, in 1894, I believe. I secured the passage through the House of a bill to reimburse certain people for damage to their property. I introduced a bill covering personal injuries to individuals, some of the claims being for doctors' fees. Those were not allowed, and we never have allowed anything of the kind.

Mr. SLAYDEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment. If we start to allow hospital expenses, doctors' bills, and everything of that sort, which never are allowed, I can not see any limit at all to what we would be asked to pay. True, this is a distressing case——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to assure the gentleman that I have seen the woman. She is horribly crippled.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that. I have read the report very carefully; but I am not willing that the House shall set a precedent—which, inside of 10 years, would probably cost the Government $10,000,000—unless the House deliberately, after consideration of the bill, determines to adopt that policy.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman is firm in his opposition to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. At present, by unanimous consent. I will have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

DUTIES ON ACETATE OF LIME.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9288) providing for the refund of certain duties illegally levied and collected on acetate of lime.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Standard Chemical Iron & Lumber Co., of Toronto, Canada, the sum of $881.30 and interest, being the amount illegally levied and collected on 391,719 pounds of acetate of lime.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SAMUEL D. KINGSBURY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11679) for the relief of Samuel D. Kingsbury.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a registered bond of the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918, with interest from May 1, 1904, in favor of Samuel D. Kingsbury, a resident of Indianapolis, Ind., in lieu of United States 3 per cent coupon bond of said loan, for $500, No. 148931, the said bond with coupons attached dated August 1, 1904, to maturity, inclusive, having been stolen: Provided, That the said Samuel D. Kingsbury shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and the unpaid interest coupon of the said bond, in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stolen bond hereinbefore described or the coupons belonging thereto.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10546) for the relief of the Illinois Central Railroad Co., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Reserving the right to object, let the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $100 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse the Illinois Central Railroad Co. for the payment by it of a fine of like amount levied and collected by the Secretary of the Treasury for failure on the part of the railroad company to clear a shipment of household goods originating in Habana, Cuba, and destined to Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, through the United States customs at Portal, N. Dak., it having been ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury subsequent to the payment of the fine by the carrier that the shipment had been duly cleared through the United States customs at Noyes, Minn., and that no customs duties were due or collectible thereon.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman a question in reference to this bill.

Mr. MANN. The Illinois Central Railroad Co. undertook to transfer by freight household goods from Cuba by way of New Orleans, which were entitled to go through without payment of duty. They stated at New Orleans that the goods were to be exported through the office at Portal, N. Dak., which is not on their line. They were actually shipped through another port, the port of Noyes, Minn., which is not on their line. The goods went to Canada. Subsequently it was reported that the goods had not gone through Portal, and the company was fined $100 by the customs department under the law. They paid the fine, supposing that the goods had not been exported, when, as a matter of fact, they had gone right to Canada through another port.

Mr. CULLOP. And the Treasury Department discovered the mistake had been made and asked to refund.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the department discovered it or not, but the Illinois Central Railroad Co. has, and asks that the money be refunded.

Mr. CULLOP. I mean that this bill seeks to refund the money.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

VILHELM TORKILDSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1326) for the relief of Vilhelm Torkildsen.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Vilhelm Torkildsen the sum of $13,561.88, as compensation for the injuries sustained by his vessel, the steamship Henrik Ibsen, while coaling war vessels of the United States of America in Panama Bay in December, 1908.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

COWDEN & COWDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1161) to pay Cowden & Cowden, of Amory, Monroe County, Miss., for the loss of a horse while being used by the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Cowden & Cowden, of Amory, Monroe County, Miss., the sum of $135, which amount is hereby appropriated in full payment for a horse that died while in use by employees of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have no doubt that this is an excellent bill, and I have no objection to it, but I want to call attention to this bill and compare it with the matter I referred to a few moments ago. In this case it is true that in the committee report they say the death of the horse resulted from improper use and neglect of the Government official who was using it. But there is nothing in the report of the Department of Agriculture to indicate that. The report of the Department of Agriculture does not set forth that there was any negligence on the part of the officials of the Government. The horse was used in the ordinary way, developed a little colic on the very first day they had him. They used him for three or four days, and he died in harness. The owners are to be paid the sum of $135.

Now, the committee says that the use of the horse was improper, but there is nothing in the departmental report to indicate that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. While it is true Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary's letter does not say anything about what caused the death of the horse, yet the report itself does state certain facts, and that statement of facts was taken from the letter of Secretary Wilson and from the affidavit that accompanied the Secretary's report. Only a part of the letter is published in the report. In his letter he sets out the fact, and after doing so, says:

It therefore seems that under these circumstances the owners of the animal should be reimbursed in a reasonable amount in that the department, by reason of the fact that the horse was in the possession of its employee at the time it died, has a certain responsibility to assume, and the claim might very properly be allowed in whatever amount your committee may decide would represent the value of the animal at the time of its death.

The value of this horse is shown to have been $135.

He bases that statement on the fact that it had been set out in his letter and the affidavit.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield that I may read a sentence from the report?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentlemen will find in the second letter written by the Secretary on February 24, 1912, to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, this language:

While a careful consideration of all the evidence at hand fails to convince me that the death of the horse was entirely due to the carelessness or negligence of the representative of this department who was using the horse at the time of its death, I appreciate the fact that Messrs. Cowden & Cowden were in no way culpable.

As the gentleman from Wyoming stated, it developed that the horse was attacked the very first day with colic and that no effort was made to relieve him and no veterinarian was called in, but they continued to use the horse for five continuous days without giving him any attention in the way of medical attendance, and the consequence was he was driven to death.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that while the department does not hold that the representatives of the department were guilty of carelessness or negligence, the committee evidently allows the claim on the theory that "the owners of the horse were in nowise culpable." The owners of the horse in the case to which I referred were not culpable. They did not see the horse from the time they let him to the department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do these farmers in the Agricultural Department who drive horses to death get disciplined for it?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not know whether they drove this horse to death, but after driving him several days he was taken sick and died.

Mr. MANN. They drove him 4 or 5 days after he was taken sick. Do they get disciplined by the department for killing horses?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not know about that. I do not know whether there was any disciplining of these men or not.

Mr. MANN. They ought to make them read some of the farmers' bulletins.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Well, if they had had the Horsebook along with them they might have doctored him and relieved him, but they did not have that among their implements.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that this horse should be paid for, but I am endeavoring to get a little light on the attitude of the committee. I do not understand how they differentiate between cases, except that if the department can be persuaded or hornswoggled into making a report that is somewhat favorable the committee makes a favorable report. On the other hand, if the department does not feel disposed to make a favorable report, the committee does not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. In my case the owners of the horse reluctantly accepted, or said that they would accept, $50 as the value of the horse, being the amount carried in the bill I introduced. This is a $135 horse. I think I made a mistake in not having valued the other horse more highly. Possibly if I had valued him at $100 the committee would have allowed the claim; but it was too modest to be allowed, I suppose. Now I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman was speaking a few moments ago, as I recall, he stated that he had introduced two bills, one favorably reported and the other unfavorably reported.

Mr. MANN. That is a fifty-fifty proposition—more than most of us get.

Mr. MONDELL. One of these bills was introduced at the request of the department, on behalf of a man I had never heard of and I do not know where he lives. I paid no attention to the bill. It was favorably reported by the committee; but the bill that I knew all about, and which I introduced for my constituent believing that he was entitled to the payment, was adversely reported by the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman appear before the committee in regard to that bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I appeared before members of the subcommittee and talked with them.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is in the position of counsel "cussing" the court.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want to repeat any private conversations, but I gained the impression—it is not necessary to say how—that if the department had been at all favorable in their report everything would have been lovely. The department simply related the facts. They hired the horse and they took him over a mountain trail, and the mountain trail gave way and he fell down with his pack and was killed.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. They said there was no negligence on the part of the officers of the department, and left the matter right there. I gained the impression that if the department report had been a little different, the state of facts being the same, everything would have been lovely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The committee does not always follow the recommendations of the department by any means.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad to know that it does not, and I hope in the future it will follow them even less.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ETHEL FREDERICKSON AND DAUGHTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2538) for the relief of Ethel Frederickson and daughter Ethel.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Alexander Besonen, of the county of Marquette, State of Michigan, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $297.27, in compliance with the findings of the Court of Claims, Senate Document No. 711, Sixtieth Congress, second session.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS FOR CERTAIN LANDS TO DUCHESNE, UTAH.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we passed a bill yesterday by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 36) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Duchesne, Utah, with an amendment striking out the word "patents" in the body of the bill and inserting therefor the word "patent," but failed to amend the title. I ask unanimous consent that the title of the bill may be amended by striking out the word "patents" in the title and substituting therefor the word "patent."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to amend the title to the bill S. 36 in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOHN B. BOSTICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9946) waiving the age limit for admission to the Medical Corps of the United States Navy in the case of John B. Bostick.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

HAROLD HOLST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9971) for the relief of Harold Holst.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Harold Holst, late of United States Marine Corps on the U. S. S. Sabine, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy, to date from October 31, 1862.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL M. FROST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 33) for the relief of Daniel M. Frost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill reported; it is very short.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Daniel M. Frost be authorized to make a homestead entry for an unappropriated quarter section of public land, subject to said entry, as though his former entry No. 6595, Larned, Kans., series, had not been made.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to allow said Frost credit for the residence and cultivation had by him in connection with said Larned entry as though it were had on said second entry when proof is submitted on the latter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object to the proposed bill so far as it relates to giving this man the right to make a homestead entry, but I think the circumstances connected with his original homestead application are very suspicious. I am not willing to pass section 2 of the bill so as to let him, after attempting to get land by what appears to be collusion, and losing out on that, that he shall now have the benefit of the time; and I would like to know how the gentleman himself would feel disposed if the House strikes out section 2 and the bill goes over to conference? Does the man really want the right to get a homestead entry and live there or is he trying to get a speculative right granted to him by which he can get a homestead entry, using the time heretofore spent upon another entry to which he was not entitled, and then use his entry, so that, in fact, he never will live on this land for a day?

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand it was his fault that he used this time on the other entry without being entitled to use it. He supposed the land was open and subject to entry, and found afterwards it was not——

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. MAYS. I am willing to accept a suggestion from the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. This is the statement of the department that is not in the report on the bill this year—I guess it is the same statement as was in the report of the bill two years ago:

It was charged that Frost made his entry by collusion with the register of the United States land office at Larned, who suggested to him the making of an entry for the land involved and accepted an application executed at Dodge City instead of at the local office. The fact that the application was so made and received is not denied, but the record does not show that there was actual collusion between Frost and the register with intent to defraud the public or the Government.

I think he knew enough to know that was not the place to make the entry and he is trying to put over something on the Government.

Mr. MAYS. This bill was not introduced by me.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. MAYS. But I am willing to strike out section 2, as the gentleman suggests, and have the bill considered.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any difficulty about striking it out; I do not want it to go back in. While, of course, I am not going to make the gentleman promise that it shall not go back in conference, I would not want it to go back at any rate if it can be helped, and certainly it will not without a fight, I will say that to the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the right to object.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out section 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 2 of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS L. GRIFFITHS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6) authorizing issuance of patent for certain lands to Thomas L. Griffiths.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to Thomas L. Griffiths a patent for lot 3 of section 30 in township 29 south of range 8 west of the Salt Lake meridian, in the State of Utah: Provided, That he shall first have paid at the rate of $1.25 per acre therefor.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. SEVY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 31) for the relief of John L. Sevy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent to John L. Sevy for the following-described lands: The south half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 12, township 36 south, range 8 west; the north half of lot 1, section 18, township 36 south, range 7 west; the south half of lot 3, section 12, township 36 south, range 8 west; the west half of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 7, township 36 south, range 7 west; the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, section 7; the west half of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 17, township 36 south, range 7 west of Salt Lake meridian, situate in the Sevier National Forest, upon the transfer by the said John L. Sevy to the United States of the north half of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12, township 36 south, range 8 west; the south half of lot 1 of section 13, township 36 south, range 8 west; the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 25, township 35 south, range 4 west; the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 17, township 36 south, range 3 west of Salt Lake meridian, situate in the Sevier and Powell National Forests: Provided, That upon the reconveyance of the surrendered lands they will become a part of the Sevier and Powell National Forests.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, page 2, line 6, by inserting after the word "of" the words "a valid title to."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are two "of's" in that line.

Mr. MANN. Where the first occurs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "of," where it first occurs, insert the words "a valid title to."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SARAH E. ELLIOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3238) for the relief of Sarah E. Elliott.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM E. HEFFNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11984) for the relief of William E. Heffner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as far as I can figure out, $525 is the utmost amount that should be allowed. If the gentleman is willing to accept an amendment reducing the sum from $675 to $525, I am willing to consider the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that I did not report this bill myself, and have no personal knowledge of the actual amount that is due.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the man claims $675 with interest, and he does not show any basis for anything but $525, which is composed of three items, $350, $75, and $100.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. If the gentleman is satisfied that is the amount actually due, of course I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I do not think anything is due, but I think there is equity for that amount.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. If the gentleman thinks it ought to be $525, according to the equity in the case, I am willing to accept an amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is a very good claim for that amount.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William E. Heffner, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $675 and interest from October 1, 1907, being the amount of money due said William E. Heffner for the construction of a barracks and bathhouse at West Lawn Cemetery, Canton, Ohio.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "and interest from October 1, 1907."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, line 6, by striking out "$675" and inserting in lieu thereof "$525."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out "$675" and inserting in lieu thereof "$525."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CLARA KANE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6406) granting the sum of $480 to Clara Kane, dependent parent, by reason of the death of William A. Yenser, late civil employee, killed as result of an accident at Philadelphia Navy Yard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am unable to read any equity in this claim. The decedent was no relation at all to the proposed beneficiary. He was not even an adopted child. He lived with the family from the time he was 10 or 12 years old.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. From the time he was 10 months old.

Mr. COX. I do not see on what principle the Government could be held liable here at all. This claimant, the beneficiary proposed in this bill, could not have inherited from the deceased, nor if the deceased were living would he inherit from the proposed beneficiary. I do not see any liability or any equity in the claim. I think I shall object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I would like to make one statement.

Mr. COX. I withhold the objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It is true this young man was not related to Clara Kane, but had come into her home when he was only 10 months old, and he lived with her until his death at the age of 26 years. She was the only mother he ever knew, and he recognized her as such and contributed to her support during all these years. It is true she never adopted him. They were poor, ignorant people, and it is suggested that they knew nothing about the law in matters of that kind. So he was not adopted, but he was recognized by everyone as her son. She is a woman in very poor circumstances, and if he had been her child she would have received this amount of money from the Government. The committee felt that, owing to that fact and the fact, as I have just stated it, about her raising and taking care of him during his immature years, that really she stood in the relation of his mother, and we ought to allow her this sum. That is our reason for doing it.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker, the case is one that appeals to me very strongly, but it does seem like going very far when, solely on grounds of sympathy, and not even upon the legal ground, much less than any legal right, we propose to pay this amount of money to this so-called adopted mother. I think I shall have to adhere to my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM A. HUTSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10858) for the relief of William A. Hutson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill as amended by the committee, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William A. Hutson, of Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $720, in compensation for injuries received by him while an employee in the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce and Labor in the year 1906.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment by inserting on line 5, page 2, after the word "pay," the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "pay," insert the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I have no doubt but that this is a claim that should be paid, and that the claimant is entitled to the $720 that the bill carries. Of course, there is no legal obligation on the part of the Government in a case of this kind. But again I am tempted to inquire as to the view and attitude of the committee with regard to claims of this character. This man lost his thumb. He gets $720. A young man in my State a few years ago lost his good right arm by a cave-in in a Reclamation Service tunnel in which he was working. That occurred about a year before the compensation law was applied to that service. Otherwise he would have received a year's pay.

I introduced a bill—and I have been pursuing it with a good deal of diligence before the committee—in which I ask not for a year's pay but for pay for some seven months, about $600, for the loss of this boy's arm. So far the committee has not been disposed to report the bill and has not reported it. I am not making any special complaint, except that I am wondering why the committee does report a bill granting $720 for the loss of a thumb and does not report a bill, which is before it, for the loss of an arm, with abundance of evidence and affidavits and statements from the department, and nothing about the case controverted at all, but with the facts patent and admitted by everybody. That bill has not yet been reported.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I would direct his attention to this fact: He states that this man lost a thumb. That is very true.

Mr. MONDELL. I think he also had an injury to an eye.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. He also lost his left eye; so he was very badly injured. It is not a case of slight injury.

Now, in regard to taking up his case, the gentleman very likely knows that the bills before this committee run into the thousands, and I will say to him that the committee works pretty hard. They meet from week to week and get rid of a thousand bills or two thousand bills all at once. I imagine that the gentlemans' bill will be reached in due course.

Mr. MONDELL. It has been before the committee, I will say to the gentleman, for three years, and I certainly have not been guilty of lack of diligence in bringing it to the attention of the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not charge that to the gentleman at all, but he must know that this committee was not in existence, so far as the present personnel is concerned, three years ago, because the committees are formed at each term of Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not think of a clearer case than the one I have referred to, and the only reason I can assign for the case not having been reported is that, as in the case of the lost horse, to which I referred a moment ago, I have apparently been too modest. I have reduced the amount, on my own motion, down to less than the amount that the young man would have been entitled under the compensation act; to about two-thirds of the amount, in fact, in order that there might be no ground for opposition to it or criticism of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

JACKSON LAKE RESERVOIR, WYO.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which H. R. 11606 was passed a short time ago and to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 5348, and for the present consideration of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the CERTAIN CLAIMS UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4208) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, various departments of the Government have the authority to report to Congress claims arising out of collisions, and so forth. I am not sure whether the Navy Department has that authority or not. The Engineers Department has and the Lighthouse Service has. This is to pay claims of various descriptions, for small amounts which are entirely proper, arising out of collisions; but the bill contains one claim for personal effects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Which claim is that?

Mr. MANN. That is the first claim. Is the gentleman willing to strike that out and then keep it out?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I think the committee reported a bill or two similar to this, but since then we have adopted the policy of cutting out matters of this kind.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I am perfectly willing to have that item go out of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I hope it will stay out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I feel quite sure that it will.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the claims arising under the Navy Department hereinafter stated, the same being in full for and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final release and discharge of the respective claims, namely:

First. To reimburse James H. Boone, Frank J. Browning, Ernest Fischer, jr., John McCabe, James Plant, Millard C. Ray, and Charles H. Storer, then enlisted men of the Navy, for personal effects lost at the time of the boiler explosion on the U. S. S. Aylwin on April 6, 1914, $45.39.

Second. To reimburse the Seaboard Air Line Railway for the cost of repairs to Virginia & Southwestern steel gondola car No. 10569 for the cost of repairs to this car damaged at the navy yard, Norfolk, Va., on June 17, 1914, $46.62.

Third. To reimburse the owners of Washington Tug & Barge Co.'s scow, No. 15 for damages suffered by this scow while discharging cargo at the navy yard, Puget Sound, Wash., on the night of November 20–21, 1914, $91.79.

Fourth. To reimburse the owners of the American schooner William H. Sumner for damages arising out of the collision between this schooner and the U. S. S. North Dakota off Cape Henry, Va., on November 21, 1914, $2,354.57.

Fifth. To reimburse the owners of scow No. 8 for damages suffered by their boat as the result of a collision with the U. S. S. Goldsborough at Tacoma, Wash., on December 17, 1914, $674.22.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph commencing on line 10, page 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amend by striking out the paragraph beginning with line 10, on page 1, and ending with line 4, on page 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend further by striking out the word "second" and inserting the word "first"; striking out the word "third" and inserting the word "second"; striking out the word "fourth" and inserting the word "third"; and striking out the word "fifth" and inserting the word "fourth," where they occur at the heads of the respective paragraphs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, by striking out "second," in line 5, and inserting "first"; striking out "third," in line 11, and inserting "second"; striking out "fourth," in line 17, and inserting "third"; and striking out "fifth," in line 22, and inserting "fourth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to line 15 of this bill, on page 2, where there is a curious collocation of words—"November twentieth-twenty-first."

Mr. MANN. It was on the night of the twentieth-twenty-first. If it was before 12 o'clock, it was the twentieth, and if it was after 12 o'clock it was the twenty-first.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

TITLE TO LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14630) to quiet title in certain citizens to certain lands lying within the meander line on the St. Francis River, and being parts of lots and tracts of land lying in Craighead County, Ark.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to each of the following lots and parcels of land lying and being in the county of Craighead and State of Arkansas to the party or parties whose name or names appear opposite the parcel or parcels of land, respectively; that is, tract No. 1 in J. Davis and A. E. McAlister, tract No. 14 in Samuel Bedwell, tract No. 15 in John Pace, tracts Nos. 21, 22, and 23 in Joseph Davis. All lands herein mentioned are situated in the county of Craighead, State of Arkansas, and are comprised in and form a part of lot 2 of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 27, township 14 north, range 6 east, containing 11.38 acres.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to the incorporated town of Lake City, in Craighead County, Ark., to all that part of lot 2 of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 27, township 14 north, range 6 east, which heretofore by said town had been dedicated to the public use for the purpose of public streets and alleys.

SEC. 3. That no patent shall issue to either of the parties mentioned in section 1 of this act until it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that there is no adverse claimant to that part of said lands for which said patent is to issue.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MATHILDA HESTERMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11660) for the relief of Mathilda Hesterman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mathilda Hesterman, widow of Herman Hesterman, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, on account of the death of said Herman Hesterman, which was caused by the negligence of employees of the United States Government at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, in the State of New York, on or about the 28th of February, 1913.

The following committee amendment was read:

On page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$1,248."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. ROTE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7182) for the relief of William S. Rote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. FOCHT. Will not the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. FOCHT. I reported the bill out of the committee, and it was a unanimous report by the Committee on War Claims. It is to reimburse an officer of the Spanish-American War who was taken ill in that horrible Camp Alger and was sent to his home in Lock Haven because all of the hospitals were overcrowded and he could not be treated there. He was charged $44 for hospital care and treatment, and it seems to me that the Government might reimburse him for that small amount.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are a good many thousands of these cases. I was here when this occurred. I tried for quite a while to get Congress to pass an act providing for the payment of these hospital expenses—men who were not treated by the Government surgeons' department but went to private hospitals. I rather thought that the Government ought to do it, but that was not the opinion of men older in service in the House, and so such a bill was never passed, although it was pending for a number of years.

There are thousands of these cases. I am not willing to start in to pay them by private bills $40 or $50 at a clip. If the gentleman thinks that this man ought to be reimbursed he should endeavor to pass a general bill reimbursing all the people who went to private hospitals after the Spanish War. It ought not be done in this way.

Mr. FOCHT. I have no objection to that if the gentleman wants to introduce a bill of that kind. The gentleman admits the justice of this claim?

Mr. MANN. I decidedly object to the theory that the Government ought to pay the claim, amounting to $40 or $50, requiring the claimants to hire an attorney, pay him half of it, and then log around to support candidates for Congress in order to get it paid.

Mr. FOCHT. As it happens in this case this gentleman lives in another district and I do not even know him.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking about this case, I am speaking about the result of the precedent.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman admits the justice of the claim; he does not deny that?

Mr. MANN. I neither admit nor deny anything.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

CHARLOTTE M. JOHNSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7883) for the relief of Charlotte M. Johnston.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Charlotte M. Johnston, mother of Frank Volney Johnston, postmaster at Tecate, Cal., border line of Mexico, who was killed in the discharge of his duty.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the figures "$2,000" and insert "$1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOE T. WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1443) for the relief of Joe T. White.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JOHN A. BINGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9737) for the relief of John A. Bingham.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John A. Bingham the sum of $500, the amount stolen from him while postmaster at Vandalia, Ill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES BOOKHAMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4880) for the relief of James Bookhamer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

GEORGE W. CROFT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6156) for the relief of the heirs of George W. Croft.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of George W. Croft, of Greenville County, S. C., or their legal representatives, the sum of $525, in full payment and satisfaction of all demands due and arising to them on account of the damage to property caused by the military forces of the United States during the War with Spain.

The following committee amendment was read:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

D. M. CARMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1425) for the relief of D. M. Carman, representing the estate of Luis R. Yangco, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

STEAMER "NORMANIA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12650) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Normania to William F. Stifel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that No. 259 on the Private Calendar is a Senate bill of similar title.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 4760, Private Calendar No. 259, of similar title, which has passed the Senate, be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that a Senate bill of similar tenor be considered in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Ottawa Transit Co., of Mentor, Lake County, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer Normania, official No. 205017, to the William F. Stifel.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The bill H. R. 12650 was laid on the table.

H. L. CORBIN.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 174, S. 17, permitting H. L. Corbin to purchase certain public lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to return to No. 174 on the Private Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That H. L. Corbin be permitted to purchase the west half of the southwest quarter of section 35, township 8 south, range 70 west of the sixth principal meridian, containing 80 acres, at $1.25 per acre.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was up awhile ago I asked to have it passed over, because the Secretary of Agriculture had written a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate stating that he would furnish additional information, which did not appear in the report. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] informs me that he has the additional information.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the committee waited awhile for the Agricultural Department to make that report, and I was rather anxious to get the bill on the calendar, as was also Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, and former Gov. Ammons of our State. However, since that time the Agricultural Department has written a letter, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands in the House, which letter is as follows:

APRIL 8, 1916.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. FERRIS: My attention has been called to the bill S. 17, "permitting H. L. Corbin to purchase certain public lands," which has passed the Senate and has also been reported out of your committee. From the records in this department it appears that H. L. Corbin purchased a tract of land now within the Pike National Forest from Messrs. Ammons and Dawson, who had acquired title from Theodore Metz. In obtaining title to the land Metz had purchased the tract from the Government under a military bounty land warrant. The tract was described as the E. ½ of the SW. ¼ of sec. 35, T. 8 S., R. 70 W., sixth principal meridian. Corbin settled upon what he believed to be the land described. Subsequently he learned that his home was established upon the W. ½ of the SW. ¼ of said section. This last-described tract was evidently the land believed by each of the claimants to be the tract called for in the original patent, since it contains the only bottom lands suitable for home-building purposes. Corbin is therefore occupying Government land, which he settled on under the belief that he had title to it. All of his ranch improvements are located on the land described in the bill and a good case for relief is undoubtedly presented.

The department has no objection to Corbin's acquiring the land he desires. Under the bill, however, he will secure title to the additional 80 acres and still retain title to the original 80 acres included in the patent, which are of little use to him and are desirable for national-forest use. In the opinion of the department, the relief sought should be obtained either by legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct the records and patent by substituting the correct description of the land which the original patentee and the present owner have occupied and claimed or by an amendment of the patent under the act of February 24, 1909 (35 Stat., 645), provided such action is authorized, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, to whom the committee may wish to refer the bill. Although the remedy is not presented in the form this department feels to be proper, if the above suggestions can not be adopted, no objection will be offered to the bill.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

In my report upon this bill I have set forth the report of the Interior Department and also an affidavit from Mr. Corbin and one from Gov. Ammons, which, because of their very clear statements of this situation, I will insert in the RECORD along with the report of the Agriculture Department, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 19, 1916.

Hon. H. L. MYERS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On January 6, 1916, I advised you that I would defer a report on S. 17, to permit H. L. Corbin to purchase a certain 80-acre tract in Colorado at $1.25 per acre, pending receipt of evidence to sustain his rights in the premises. Senator THOMAS, who introduced the bill, has now forwarded to this department three affidavits setting forth the facts in the case, and I now have the honor to report as follows:

On June 30, 1879, patent issued under a military bounty land warrant to one Theodore Metz, under whom the beneficiary of the proposed bill holds title, for E. ½ SW. ¼ sec. 35, T. 8 S., R. 70 W., sixth principal meridian; the testimony shows clearly that the intention had been to locate W. ½ SW. ¼ of said section, the tract named in the bill, the other being almost worthless; that Ammons and Dawson purchased Metz's title under the belief that they were acquiring the last-named tract; and that H. L. Corbin purchased from them under the same belief.

Upon a showing of mistake in describing the land located, amendment of a claim and issuance of new patent can ordinarily be secured by a transferee, under section 2372, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 24, 1909 (35 Stat., 645). However, the lands here in question were, by proclamation of May 12, 1905, included in the Pike National Forest; moreover, all the lands in the township mentioned were, on March 3, 1915, suspended from entry by the General Land Office, pending a resurvey, in view of errors and uncertainties in the old one.

The preliminary field examination by which the necessity of a resurvey of the township was ascertained showed the position of most of the corners in the southern part thereof, including section 35, that no complications would be involved in identifying the subdivisions in said section, and that there would be no change in the lines there, but that same would merely have to be relocated. Therefore, notwithstanding the withdrawal mentioned, this department does not desire to interpose objection to the enactment of the proposed bill; but I suggest that a report on the subject be obtained by your committee from the Department of Agriculture, in view of the fact that the land lies within a national forest. By reason of its inclusion therein, no adverse right to the tract could be asserted, except by a person claiming settlement prior to January 1, 1906; and that department would doubtless be able to furnish information as to the possible existence of such settlement claim.

The papers submitted by Senator THOMAS are transmitted herewith.

Very truly, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

STATE OF TEXAS,
County of El Paso, ss:

Henry P. Corbin, being first duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says that this affiant was a resident of Jefferson County, Colo., from the spring of 1871 until the fall of 1914, at which time he became a resident of El Paso, Tex., having been appointed consulting engineer for the American section of the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico; that he is familiar with the land known as the Theodore Metz place, situated in sec. 35, T. 8 S., R. 70 W. of the sixth principal meridian, on the line between Jefferson and Douglas Counties, in the State of Colorado; that he has known this land since the early eighties, when it was sold by Mr. Metz to Dawson and Ammons, and became known as the Ox Yoke Ranch. The land on which Metz made entry and paid out is the E. ½ of the SW. ¼ of sec. 35, T. 8 S., R. 70 W. of the sixth principal meridian. The range rider for the Pikes Peak Forest Reserve made a survey by which it was discovered that the E. ½ of SW. ¼ sec. 35 lies east of the river and is hilly and rough and suitable only for grazing, while nearly all the land which was cultivated by Metz and has been in almost continuous cultivation since lies west of the river, being the W. ½ of SW. ¼ of sec. 35, T. 8 S., R. 70 W. of the sixth principal meridian. The buildings and the greater part of the fencing are on the west side of the river and on Government land. In the early part of the summer of 1913, at the request of Gov. Ammons and on the suggestion of Timothy O'Connor, then surveyor general for Colorado, the affiant made a survey of sec. 35, T. 8 S., R. 70 W. of the sixth principal meridian, and found that the land under cultivation is Government land and that covered by the patent is grazing land.

STATE OF COLORADO,
City and county of Denver, ss:

Comes now Elias M. Ammons, of Denver, Colo., who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is well acquainted with the tract of land purchased by Theodore Metz on January 26, 1878, register and receiver's No. 49, Denver, Colo., land district; and paid for with military bounty land warrant No. 48247, act of 1850; the tract of land so purchased being described in the United States patent issued to the said Theodore Metz as the E. ½ SW. ¼ sec. 35, T. 8 S., R. 70 W., sixth principal meridian; that affiant has been well and intimately acquainted with the said tract of land since the date of its original purchase, and in the year 1885 affiant, jointly with Thomas F. Dawson, purchased the said tract of land of the said Theodore Metz, and he and the said Thomas F. Dawson continued in the joint ownership of said land until about 10 years since, at which time they conveyed the same to H. L. Corbin, the present owner; that the said tract of land as originally purchased from the Government by Metz and now owned by Corbin adjoins the South Fork of the South Platte River and covers all of the low ground along said stream at that point; that this particular tract of land has been continuously under cultivation from shortly after the date of its original purchase from the Government to the present time, and for a period of about 20 years affiant himself personally looked after the cultivation of same; that this particular tract of land has always been recognized as the land originally purchased by Metz, and its ownership was never brought into question until it was surveyed about three years ago by a United States forest officer, who found that this 80-acre tract which embraces the low ground along the river, which has been in cultivation for so many years, and which was intended to have been described by the United States patent issued to Theodore Metz, as aforesaid, is in fact correctly described as the W. ½ SW. ¼ sec. 35, T. 8 S., R. 70 W., sixth principal meridian, and the E. ½ SW. ¼ of said section 35 is rough and mountainous land lying away from the river and fit for no agricultural use except for the little pasture it may afford, and that upon becoming advised of this the present owner's son, who is a surveyor and civil engineer, made a careful survey of the land and found the facts to be just as alleged by the said Government officer, the land actually described in the said United States patent issued to Theodore Metz being very rough and mountainous and lying away from the river and altogether worthless for farming purposes, while the land lying along the river, which was originally intended to have been purchased by Metz and which has been farmed for so many years and always recognized as covered by the Metz patent, is in fact a part of the public domain and belongs to the Pike National Forest.

Notary Public.

My commission expires October 14, 1917.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits.

By unanimous consent, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

BARKENTINE MABEL I. MEYERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11129) for the relief of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew, and for the relief of the owners of cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the barkentine Mabel I. Meyers and her master and crew, and the claim of the owners of the cargo of molasses late on board said barkentine in alleged collision with the U. S. S. Nebraska about 30 miles southeast of Cape Cod, Mass., on the 30th day of July, 1915, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said barkentine and by her master and crew, and by the owners of said cargo, may be submitted to the United States Court for the District of Massachusetts, the district nearest to which the collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty. And that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages, including interest, sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners or master or crew of said barkentine, or any or either of them, or to the owners of said cargo, or either of them, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor, including interest and costs, shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit or suits shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

With the following committee amendments:

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

E. W. ROHMELING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7504) for the relief of E. W. Rohmeling.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

HENRY S. ROYCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1622) for the relief of Henry S. Royce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the relief of a citizen of Tacoma, Wash., for a loss sustained in the operation of the regulations for controlling the foot-and-mouth disease. I believe it is the first bill of that kind to come before the House. I understand that the objections to the bill are not against the merits of the bill, but because, if passed, it establishes a precedent. Mr. Royce, the claimant, is one of those energetic American citizens who tries always to do his duty. In this case he made not the slightest objection to the destruction of a herd of 102 blooded cattle, which he had just purchased and which were being shipped to him from Wisconsin. The herd contracted the disease in the railroad transfer yards near St. Paul. Without stopping to parley, he accepted the Government's offer to pay a part of the beef value of the herd, it being expected that the State would pay part. Now, the Bureau of Animal Industry says the herd should have been appraised at its dairy value, and recommends that Congress pay him a part of what he has lost. Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Royce, having done his full duty, expects the Member of Congress representing him to do the same. He is, like many others with claims, unable to see why a Member of Congress, after speaking to the leaders and arranging with the Speaker for recognition, can not rise in his place, move that a bill like this be passed, pass it, and then go down to the Treasury Department and get the three thousand and odd dollars, which would only partly reimburse him for the actual amount of money he is out—over $11,000, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Speaker, I can not criticize Congress or its committees or its leaders because they do not seem inclined to act, even on the favorable report which has been presented, and authorize the payment of the money due him, precedent or no precedent—for one reason, my own State of Washington has not paid to him the $2,025, which, through the governor of that State, it was agreed with the agents of the Government should be paid him. However, that portion will be paid, I am sure, and, as stated in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, which appears in the full and complete report made by the Committee on Claims in connection with the bill, Mr. Royce has a just and valid claim against the Government. It should be paid, and since we are working under an agreement for unanimous consent, I ask that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief statement. Mr. Speaker, we appropriated last year, I believe, two and a half million dollars and will appropriate this year two and a half million dollars really to pay damages on account of the foot-and-mouth disease, and we have endeavored to limit the amount which should be paid. Last year it was, as far as the General Government was concerned, not to exceed 50 per cent of the value of the stock destroyed, relating to practically the meat value. We changed that a little in the act this year, or will change it before it becomes a law.

There are millions of dollars of property which have been destroyed in live stock which have not been paid for. The owners of fancy cattle, breeding cattle, worth hundreds and sometimes thousands of dollars, only had a claim for the meat value. There are a great many cases, running all along the line, which will amount to millions of dollars. I do not know whether or not Congress will ever be inclined to pay all these claims. I suppose there are more of them, probably, emanating in my State than in any other three or four States in the Union, because there was a large destruction on account of the foot-and-mouth disease there, and there were many herds of fancy cattle destroyed. I am not willing to let the Committee on Claims, which, with all due respect to the members of it, have not given any special attention to the subject of foot-and-mouth disease, determine by a private bill what the attitude of the Government shall be with respect to millions of dollars of claims.

If Congress should decide to pay these claims, in the end it ought to be by some general legislation, and really we ought to have the opinion of the Committee on Agriculture.

Now, the claim of the gentleman from Washington has strong equities in it. Many other parts of the country have claims which have strong equities in them, but to pass a bill of that sort by unanimous consent of the House I think would not be proper. And I will be very frank with my friend from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]. I do not think it is possible to reach this bill for consideration on the Contested Calendar under any regular order, so I think that the gentleman who is the beneficiary under the bill will have to retain his patience for a time, hard as that may be to him and others who have similar claims.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that what I have written my constituent is very much to that effect, and I also would like to state that the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, has acted with great fairness in the matter as far as they could. The agents of that bureau paid Mr. Royce—paid their share—$2,025, according to the first agreement, within two months after the loss was sustained. I presume that the balance of his claim for the destruction of this rich dairy herd, worth ten or eleven thousand dollars, will remain before this and succeeding Congresses, and that ultimately it will be allowed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

WALLACE L. BELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12267) for the relief of Wallace L. Bell.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Wallace L. Bell, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $160, for 32 days' automobile hire for the use of the Government as special agent in collecting statistics for the Bureau of the Census in district No. 24, in Georgia, in March and April, 1914.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN, GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1741) for the relief of certain homestead entrymen for lands within the limits of the Glacier National Park.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entries heretofore made by Howard E. Jones, Ernest R. Henthorn, Daniel C. Doverspike, Ora Reeves, Louis N. Fournier, Pat Doyle, Walter E. Barricklow, and Frank Kelly for lands within the limits of the Glacier National Park, in the Kalispell, Mont., land district, which entries were allowed under an order issued by the Secretary of the Interior on May 21, 1910, based upon lists approved by the Secretary of Agriculture prior to the passage of the act of May 11, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 354), creating the said Glacier National Park, be, and they are hereby, excepted from the force and effect of said act of May 11, 1910: Provided, That should said entries not be perfected as required by law the lands embraced therein shall revert to and become a part of the said Glacier National Park.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 8, by striking out the word "an" and making the word "order" in the plural, and in line 9, after the word "twenty-first," insert the words "and twenty-fifth."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "an" and change the word "order" to "orders"; and in line 9, page 1, after the word "twenty-first," insert "and twenty-fifth."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. GRACE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3894) for the relief of George H. Grace.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,718.95, in full compensation for all claims, to George H. Grace, of Lead, S. Dak., being the sum paid by him to the Postmaster General on account of money-order funds embezzled by Raymond L. Shea, late money-order clerk in the post office at Lead, S. Dak.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS H. HALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12582) to relieve the estate of Thomas H. Hall, deceased, late postmaster at Panacea, Fla., and the bondsmen of said Thomas H. Hall, of the payment of money alleged to have been misappropriated by a clerk in said office.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the estate of Thomas H. Hall, deceased, late postmaster at Panacea, Fla., and the bondsmen of the said Thomas H. Hall as such postmaster, be, and they are hereby, relieved of the payment of $544.73, together with the amount of the costs which may have accrued, on account of the United States bringing an action to enforce the payment of said sum, the said sum being the amount of cash and funds held by the Post Office Department to be due from said Hall's estate to the United States, for money misappropriated to his own use by a clerk in said post office while the proffered resignation of said Hall was pending in the Post Office Department and while the said clerk was acting as postmaster with the consent and acquiescence of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10555) referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

STUART, LEWIS, GORDON & RUTHERFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10872) making an appropriation to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, in payment of legal services rendered by them to the Creek Nation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve my objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say with reference to this bill that the firm of Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford was employed by the Creek Nation under an act of the National Council of the Creek Nation approved January 7, 1898. When this firm was employed the Creek Council had authority to enact its own legislation. The Creek Nation had authority to employ its own attorney, and this firm of attorneys was employed. There was no question but that they rendered the services. Nobody doubts that; but before their services were concluded and before the Creek Council appropriated the money—if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I have read this report. I know all the gentleman has stated. He is not stating it for my benefit.

Mr. HASTINGS. I really was stating it, to be frank about it, for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I have read every line of this report and marked it up.

Mr. HASTINGS. I really believe if I could have his attention for a moment I could convince him of the justness of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman might be able to do that, but not by reading the report. I have read the report and am familiar with it.

Mr. HASTINGS. There is one point I wanted to emphasize, and that is this, namely, that they were employed under a contract that was made before the Curtis Act. After the passage of the Curtis Act all the acts of the Creek Council had to be approved by the President. Prior to that no act had to be approved. They could appropriate any amount of money that the Creek Council wanted to appropriate.

Mr. MANN. And the reason they passed the Curtis Act was because they were swindling too many of them down there.

Mr. HASTINGS. This firm of attorneys was employed under the act passed January 7, 1898, prior to the passage of the Curtis Act, under the act of the council that the council had a right to enact. They did render the service. Here is the report of the United States Indian inspector to that effect, and here is the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to that effect, and the report of the Indian inspector states in one place that the Creek Council passed it unanimously. I find in another place the report states that the Creek Council after investigating this matter passed it in the senate 21 to 7 and in the house 72 to 1. Over on the other page I find the statement made that the act was unanimously passed. The point I am inviting the gentleman's attention to is that these services were rendered under a contract which they had a right to make. The services were rendered. It was not disputed by anybody who was on the ground at that time.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the services were rendered. There is nothing here to show that they were, except the statement of the men themselves.

Mr. HASTINGS. But here is the investigation of the Creek Council at the time that the services were rendered. Here is the statement of the Indian inspector at the time——

Mr. MANN. The statement of the Indian inspector does not state that the services were rendered.

Mr. HASTINGS. He says that they are anxious to pay them and that they investigated them at the time, and they were there upon the ground. The inspector lived in the city of Muskogee, in the Creek Nation, at the time.

Mr. MANN. He does not say whether the services were rendered or not.

Mr. HASTINGS. He says that they were investigated at the time. On the next page of this report the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says:

It may be proper, however, to add that the said beneficiaries have rendered services to the Creek Nation, and the Creek people appear to be anxious to pay for such service, and that, therefore, the act should, if no objection thereto appears, receive the approval of the President.

Now, the Secretary of the Interior did not have time then to investigate the claim. He says in his report to the President that the contract was not made in accordance with sections 2103 and 2104 of the Revised Statutes, when the fact of the matter is that none of the Five Civilized Tribes prior to the Curtis Act ever made any contract under section 2103. They had the right to appropriate any amount of money without the approval of the President of the United States for payment of services of this character. There is no question but what it was a legal contract. There is no question but what the claim was investigated by the Creek authorities at the time. Nobody questions but what these services were rendered at that time.

Mr. MANN. I question it decidedly. There is no evidence of it. President McKinley questioned it and Secretary Lane questions it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Secretary Lane only makes an adverse report on it because of the fact that it was recommended for disapproval by Secretary Hitchcock at that time, and Secretary Hitchcock, if you will notice in his adverse report, states not that the services were not rendered, but he says that the contract was not made in accordance with sections 2103 and 2104, and that was not required. This firm was legally employed, performed the services, the Creek Council tried at the time to pay the same, the local Government officer—the inspector—recommended it, the commissioner recommended it, and the adverse report of Secretary Hitchcock was without any reason.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURRAY). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. There is no such thing as "time has expired" on this. It is not for the Chair to call a speaker down. It is for some Member of the House.

Mr. HASTINGS. Those are really the facts about it.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HASTINGS. I invite the gentleman's attention to Secretary Hitchcock's letter.

Mr. MANN. I have read the thing entirely. The council had a claim before it and put it through. Now, if the gentleman will finish, I want to make a statement.

Mr. HASTINGS. Go ahead.

Mr. MANN. Under what circumstances it passed through the council I do not know, but it had to be submitted to the President. President McKinley disapproved it in 1900. That is a good while ago. They knew they had no claim, in my opinion. Nothing was done about it. Finally the bill was introduced, and this is what Secretary Lane says concerning it, and it does not go to the merits of the proposition, in one sense:

In view of the record of disapproval by the President on November 17, 1900, of the claim as then presented by said attorneys, and as 15 years have elapsed since the disapproval without any further action being taken by said attorneys to renew the claims, which seem to be without merit, and I recommend that no further action be had on H. R 10872.

It is nonsense to talk about passing such a bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No; I will not waste any more time on it. Other Members have bills pending. I will not give unanimous consent to pass such a bill. It may be that upon full presentation of the facts the gentleman could show the merits, but in view of the disapproval of the President and the Secretary of the Interior on matters right under their control, the gentleman should not expect us to pass upon a claim like this by unanimous consent.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I just wanted to state how, in my opinion, this disapproval by the President came about.

Mr. MANN. I expect I have as full information on that subject as the gentleman from Oklahoma, but if the gentleman will undertake to explain to the House how they managed to work this claim through that legislative body, that would be interesting, if he knows the facts and will tell them.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not know what information the Creek Council had, nor what information the gentleman may have. I was just going to speak about the record respecting this contract. When the contract was made there was no law requiring the approval by the President or any other officer of the Federal Government of such contract, but before the time this act was passed for the discharge of the obligation there was an act passed which required that all acts appropriating money by the tribal council should be approved by the President.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. HASTINGS] has already made that statement.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the regular order. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

CATHRINE GRACE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14570) for the relief of Cathrine Grace.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

R. L. JENNINGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13636) for the relief of R. L. Jennings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Well, this is one of the errors that the committee or the printing clerk made. This bill never was reported to the House at all. There was reported from the Committee on Claims a resolution which has never been printed in resolution form. If gentlemen want to pass a resolution referring these claims to the Court of Claims, I have no objection; but the bill never was reported favorably.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That was the object, to have the matter reported to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. If the clerk to the Committee on Claims would prepare these things in the proper shape this matter would not arise. They have gone on the theory that it is the business of the reading clerk to read a report through. It is not the business of the reading clerk to read a report of the committee to find out what is in it. I am perfectly willing to pass a resolution. That is what the committee referred to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Then I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution be reported.

Mr. MANN. It is in the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Mississippi please repeat his request?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. My request is that the resolution presented by the Committee on Claims be referred to the House.

Mr. MANN. Let the Clerk read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 259.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 13636) for the relief of R. L. Jennings, with the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for the finding of facts and conclusions of law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

P. H. AYLETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14645) for the relief of the legal representative of P. H. Aylett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Claims is just a trifle behind the times. So is the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, Gov. MONTAGUE.

This bill is a bill which relates to the payment of a claim to some one, I think, who was in the Confederate service. The report says:

An act making appropriation for its payment is now necessary by reason of the provisions of section 3480, United States Revised Statutes.

That section of the Revised Statutes was repealed some time ago.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. If the committee fell into error, it was done very largely because of an error by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I know. The Acting Secretary of the Treasury did not know.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Very likely not.

Mr. MANN. That is to say, he wrote a letter; I do not know at whose instance he wrote it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. He wrote it at the instance of Senator BRYAN.

Mr. MANN. We have paid quite a number of claims in the deficiency appropriation acts, claims which have been allowed since the repeal of this section of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The statement in the report, however, does not affect the bill, as I see.

Mr. MANN. It is not necessary to pass such a bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The Secretary of the Treasury seemed to think so, and the parties interested thought so.

Mr. MANN. If he has a claim he can have it audited and allowed and paid.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman from Illinois tell me how it can be paid?

Mr. MANN. If a man has a legal claim against the Government, as this purports to be, he can send it to the Treasury and have it audited, and then it will be sent up here, and we will make an appropriation in a deficiency bill to pay it. We pay thousands of dollars of them every year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The claimants have been trying to do it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. They have not been trying to do it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It has been due since 1861.

Mr. MANN. They have not been trying to collect it, and the reason why they have not been trying to collect it is because of section 3480 of the Revised Statutes. It is safe to say the man has never made an effort to collect it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The man has been dead for many years. He died about 1868. His descendants have made an effort to collect it.

Mr. MANN. No. The only effort they have made was to ask the gentleman from Virginia to introduce a bill in their behalf.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; I have not been requested to introduce a bill by the claimants.

Mr. MANN. Then they have made no effort at all?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, yes; they have.

Mr. MANN. I know what must have taken place.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not question that; I do not question the gentleman's omnipotent knowledge in that respect.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need not get sarcastic.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not getting sarcastic.

Mr. MANN. Because I happen to know a thing that is not saying that I have omnipotent knowledge, although the gentleman did not know it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But suppose that provision of the Revised Statutes does exist, that does not militate against the fact that these people have from time to time endeavored to secure the collection of their claim.

Mr. MANN. I dare say that they never tried to secure the payment at all until this bill was introduced.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The information I get is different. Of course the gentleman may have other and better information than I have about it. I understand, then, that the gentleman objects?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly. These people can get their money, if they have a claim, by going and presenting their claim where it can be properly audited by people who know whether they have a claim. We do not know.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman will permit me to say, my observation has been—and it has come under my practical experience as United States district attorney for four years—that to get anything that the United States Government owes you is a pretty difficult thing to do.

Mr. MANN. My experience is that there is no difficulty at all in getting anything from the United States if it is a legal claim.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Apparently there is great difficulty right now, which I can not surmount. With the gentleman's ability and experience and knowledge of this House—I hope he will not think I mean to be sarcastic; I desire to pay him a very sincere tribute—with his ability and knowledge of parliamentary procedure, we can not get anything if he objects to it.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman is through, will he permit me to make an intelligent statement without interruption? If the gentleman himself——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me one remark?

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman will not permit me. He will interrupt every time. I hope the gentleman will proceed until he is through.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was going to say to the gentleman that I thought I had the floor.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not have the floor. I had the floor. I am quite willing to yield it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You see, we take issue again on a matter of fact. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman may have the floor.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If I have it, I yield it to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURRAY). The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. MANN. No; I reserved the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has already objected.

Mr. MANN. I reserved the right to object.

Mr. ROUSE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MANN. This is not the State Legislature of Oklahoma.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If I have the floor, I yield it to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROUSE. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman claims he reserved the right to object. Let the gentleman from Illinois proceed.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman demands the regular order, he has a right to do that.

Mr. ROUSE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

THE FERRIES CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13247) for the relief of The Ferries Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Ferries Co., owner of the American ferry steamer Winthrop, injured in a collision with the U. S. tug Hercules in the Berkley ferry slip in the harbor of Norfolk, Va., on January 27, 1914, for and on account of damages to said steamer Winthrop by reason of said collision, may be submitted to the United States district court in and for the eastern district of Virginia, under and in compliance with the rules of said court in admiralty; and the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree against the United States for the amount of damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found due by it, upon the same principles and measures of liability, with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. JACKSON J. MASH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14889) for the relief of the estate of Jackson J. Mash, deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, a few moments ago we had a special bill in which the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] was interested, that could not be paid for many years because of section 3480 of the Revised Statutes. I yielded to the gentleman to make an explanation of it but did not get a chance to make a further explanation because of what seemed to me the discourtesy of my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSE] demanding the regular order.

All of these claims which are for money due from the Government for salary were barred as long as section 3480 of the Revised Statutes was in effect, that section prohibiting the payment of these claims to people who were in the service of the Confederate States. But they now can be presented in due course to the department and admitted by the department. They are then transmitted to Congress as audited claims, and we pay them in the deficiency appropriation bill. Every year now we carry money to pay a large number of claims due the men who were in the Confederate service where the claims were formerly barred, while section 3480 of the Revised Statutes was in force. It is very likely that these men having these claims did not know that there had been any change in the law. I take it that Members of Congress who introduced the bill did not know that there had been a change, but there is no reason why the House should be burdened with the consideration of special bills for the payment of claims which can be audited and paid in the regular course of governmental business.

Mr. PARK. Is there any reason why the bills should not be expedited by allowing them to go through and be paid?

Mr. MANN. Yes. Suppose John Jones has a claim against the Government for salary. Should he be allowed to come and ask Congress to pass a special bill in his favor when all he has to do is to submit his claim to the department and have it audited?

Mr. PARK. These heirs have waited half a century for this money without interest, and it only amounts to about $150.

Mr. MANN. It seems incomprehensible to me that men do not understand the fairness of such a case—to take up our time for the purpose of considering a bill where all the parties have to do is to take the claim to the officials of the Government who have the information upon which they can secure the money. The only excuse that is given when the claims are presented is that they are barred by section 3480 of the Revised Statutes, which has been repealed for several years.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is it not the duty of the debtor to pay rather than to compel the creditor to pursue the debtor?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is the duty of the debtor to run around and hunt up the man to whom he owes money when he is ready to pay it at the office where the bill is due.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not speaking of the Government, I am speaking of the general rule of law.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the gentleman's course is, but I wait until they send me the bill, and then I send them a check. I have never been in the habit of starting out on the 1st of the month, going around either on foot, street car, or automobile, to people with whom I deal, asking them how much I owe and paying them right then and there. I wait until they send me a bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Most of us do that way, but that does not change the rule of or the right under the law.

DUTIES ON STEEL BLOOMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4398) for the refund of excess duties on steel blooms.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the bill reported.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., the sum of $65,792.53; Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. the sum of $26,400.30; and the estate of Henry A. V. Post, deceased, the sum of $50,359.35, as a refund of import duties paid in excess of the duties imposed by law on steel blooms, as found by the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee something about the facts in connection with this bill. How is it that this matter has been delayed so long, and why is it that these duties are to be refunded?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I will state the facts briefly, as I understand them. Many years ago there was a considerable importation of what are called steel blooms. These importations were made by a great many individuals and firms. Officers of the Government claimed that there should be imposed a duty of 45 per cent. The importers claimed that they should pay only 30 per cent. While that dispute was in progress between the importers and the officers of the Government, the officials of the Government threatened that unless they paid 45 per cent duty without protest, a duty of 2¼ cents per pound, which amounted to 180 per cent, would be imposed, so the importers, rather than run the risk of having to pay such a large duty, did pay the 45 per cent, and later on these cases were taken into the Court of Claims.

Mr. CULLOP. Right there I would like to ask the gentleman if there is not a court constituted under the law for the purpose where there is a dispute about what the duty should be of determining what it is—a court for that purpose sitting in New York City, the functions of which are to determine all questions in reference to duties on articles imported into this country?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That is probably true, but I will state to the gentleman that the Court of Claims held in this matter that these parties were, by duress, forced to pay 45 per cent instead of running the risk of paying 180 per cent.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Covering what time did these claims arise which we are now called upon to refund?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not remember the exact date.

Mr. MANN. From 1879 to 1882.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will state further that there were claims of duty collected amounting to about $800,000. All of the parties have been refunded the amount of duties paid in excess of what they ought to have paid save these parties. If I am not mistaken, the amount of seven hundred and odd thousand dollars has been refunded. There was a bill passed providing for the refund of the duties, naming the importers in that bill. For some reason, I do not know why, the parties mentioned in this bill were left out. They were not included.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the chairman if this question was ever submitted to the court of appraisers sitting in New York which has jurisdiction in this matter to determine what the proper duty was?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not think it was, but I have already stated to the gentleman that the officials of the Government threatened these parties and said if they did not pay the 45 per cent they would assess them 180 per cent, and the Court of Claims held that because of these threats these parties were forced to take the action they did and that these threats kept them from making a protest which the law required they should do.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the excuse offered by these gentlemen is sufficient. They were full-grown men, actively engaged in business, and they knew of this court where they could settle that matter, and no Government official could create a right by asserting that if a person did not do so and so he would charge a higher duty. Such high-handed coercion on the part of the official was reprehensible, if true, and he ought to have been promptly removed. They had a right to complain against that official. They had a right to lodge a charge against him and have him removed, because there are courts of justice in this country to settle the controversies between men, and, therefore, they had their resort to it. This occurred something over 30 years ago, and coming in here now it seems to me that this is a pretty stale claim, and I think in view of this fact and the large amount involved it ought to be further investigated, and therefore I object.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CULLOP. I will reserve the objection for a moment, as I do not want to do or see an injustice done anyone.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this statement in regard to what the gentleman has said about the failure of these people to take advantage of their fight and go into court. As I have already stated, they were threatened, and they ought not to be held down to the strict letter of the law because of these threats, and we ought to recognize the fact that the Government reached down into the pockets of these people and took money that did not belong to it. The gentleman says that it is a stale claim. It is an old claim, but these people have been making constant efforts to secure the money, and while it is an old claim, that simply means this, that the Government has had the use of this money unjustly and unlawfully for the 30 years and odd of which he speaks.

Mr. CULLOP. But as I understand the gentleman from Mississippi, this question in dispute has never been submitted to the proper tribunal, the court of appraisers, which was constituted for the purpose of determining disputes of this kind, to ascertain whether the duty which the Government charged was a proper duty.

As I understand, there is no contention with them in reference to the 45 per cent charge that the Government was undertaking to make a charge which was not required under the law then in force for that purpose, but what they claimed was that it was under a lower duty, and that the question was not submitted to the proper tribunal to determine who was right, the Government or the other party.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact——

Mr. MANN. There is no use wasting time on this.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I would like to make one statement. The gentleman says this matter was never submitted to a proper court.

Mr. CULLOP. I said I had no information.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will state to the gentleman that one of the firms did take the matter into court, Downing & Co., in their case against the Collector of Customs at the port of New York, and the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York held the lawful rate of duty to be only 30 per cent ad valorem. The Treasury Department accepted that decision as final and adopted it as its rule. Now, they had the intimation that the time had passed and the only recourse they had was to come to us for relief.

Mr. CULLOP. They want back all the money and not even pay the Government anything.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. They only want the difference between 30 and 45 per cent. This bill is intended to refund only the 15 per cent that was charged in excess of the lawful duty. Two courts, the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York and the Court of Claims, have passed upon this matter, and each court held that this amount was unlawfully collected.

The gentleman does not understand this matter, so I shall make the following brief statement of the facts regarding the H. A. V. Post estate portion of this bill, calling for a refund of $50,359.35, and the facts in the other items are very similar.

From July 1, 1879, to October 31, 1881, Col. Post—the firm of Clark, Post & Martin, New York—were large importers of "steel blooms."

The entries for a larger portion of these importations were made in the name of the firm Clark, Post & Martin, and the smaller portion by the firm as agents for the Springfield Iron Co.

The legal and proper duty on these steel blooms, as determined by the United States courts, was 30 per cent ad valorem. The Treasury officials demanded a duty amounting to 45 per cent, which, under threats and duress, as afterwards proven, was paid. This 15 per cent excess duty thus exacted amounted to the sum of $74,420.10.

The 45 per cent rate of duty exacted was understood at the time to be an illegal duty by the many importers who paid it, but they were repeatedly informed, to the extent of a threat, that if they protested against paying the 15 per cent excess rate the Treasury Department would reclassify these importations as "steel ingots" at $0.02¼ per pound, which rate would have been prohibitory, and rather than be ruined the unlawful excess 15 per cent rate was paid without protest. An importer brought suit—Dowing against Robertson, collector—where the United States circuit court, New York, held the lawful rate of duty to be 30 per cent, and the Supreme Court of the United States dismissed the appeal, and the Treasury Department, February 11, 1885, decided that there should be no further litigation on the subject.

There having been, for reasons stated, no protest in making the various entries on these steel blooms, a law was passed by Congress, first presented in 1886 and finally passed January 9, 1903, providing for the refund of all duties paid on these steel blooms in excess of the lawful 30 per cent. This refund under the act was made to all who had paid the excessive and illegal rate, excepting the present claim now before you of Col. Post, as the successor of Clark, Post & Martin; that of Walston H. Brown, and of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., the Bates & Despard claim and that of the Illinois Steel Co. having been paid in 1905.

The amount—$50,359.35—since due Col. Post was not at that time—1903—repaid under that act simply and only from the fact of a clerical error in not having included the firm name—Clark, Post & Martin—in the act of January 9, 1903, individually, as well as the firm name as agents of the Springfield Iron Co. The overpayment of duty was in all respects precisely like the other cases where the refunds were all made under that act.

There never has been any question but what it was the intention in that act of Congress of 1903 to return all the illegally collected duty of 15 per cent as mentioned, and Col. Post was not aware until the findings of his claim were filed in court April 2, 1906, that he—under the act and in omission of his firm name individually—that the excess amount paid by the firm also was not included.

A bill to cover this defect was promptly introduced in Congress March, 1906, favorably reported by the Senate committee, and passed by the Senate April, 1906. The bill in the House, however, was not reported by the Committee on Claims. The bill was again introduced in the Sixtieth Congress (S. 763; H. R. 12575) and both referred to the Committee on Claims. The subcommittee of the House considered the bill favorably, but did not report.

Again the bill was introduced in the Sixty-first Congress (H. R. 16143), ordered printed, but not reported. Again introduced in the Sixty-second Congress, second session (S. 4266; H. R. 17323); no action. The bill was before the Senate Committee on Claims, and on February 13, 1912, was referred to the Court of Claims for findings of fact. The bill was thereupon reintroduced in form to be referred, and was referred for findings February 22, 1912. The findings of the Court of Claims was on February 7, 1914, reported back to the Senate. On February 27, 1914, the bill was referred to Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON by the Committee on Claims and soon afterwards favorably reported by him to the committee.

The bill for relief was again last year promptly introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims. On March 3, 1915, a bill providing for the refund to the estate of Col. Post passed the Senate, but not in time for action by the House. On February 15, 1916, the present bill (S. 4398) was transferred from the Committee on Claims to the Senate Finance Committee, which committee reported March 9 in favor of the bill, as stated by Senator LA FOLLETTE, as per the printed memoranda of Senate proceedings of that date herewith. And on March 9, 1916, this bill (S. 4398) passed the Senate without objection or adverse vote.

The facts as above indicated, as also stated by Senator LA FOLLETTE before the Senate and fully elaborated and set forth in the Court of Claims' findings of fact in this case, clearly establish the fact that there can be no possible question of doubt whatever—

First. That Col. Post—Clark, Post & Martin—had paid into the Treasury in cash from 1879 to 1881 in excessive and illegally collected duties $74,420.10.

Second. That but $24,060.75 has yet been returned, and that $50,359.35 has been for all these years as honorably and justly due as any money to anyone has been or can possibly be due from the United States Government. And it seems incredible that the Government should retain such unlawfully obtained money, extorted by its own officials as determined by its own courts, and leave the victims, its own citizens, all these years helpless, without reimbursement, and thus far without remedial action by Congress. Even now the noncollectible interest has reached an amount nearly or quite equal to the principal originally extorted.

The findings of fact by the United States court and the Court of Claims also show clearly enough that there has been no delay on the part of Col. Post in his efforts to obtain redress; or can there be the slightest question from the findings of the Court of Claims—where the subject was thoroughly thrashed out by counsel on both sides—as to the intention of Congress to refund all this money paid for improper and illegal duties, nor why, under every principle of fair dealing, this injustice of nonpayment should have gone on for all this decade of years.

An examination of the decision of the United States court determining that 30 per cent was the lawful duty and the findings of the Court of Claims that the excess 15 per cent was paid under duress of the Treasury officials and that that was the reason that protests were not made at the time, clearly and unequivocably establishes the wrong and great injustice in deferring longer the repayment of this money, the Government having had the use of the amount due for so many years.

This bill (S. 4398) is not, therefore, in any sense an ordinary claim, but merely provides for the refund payment of money extorted and paid into the Treasury under the aggravating circumstances as here stated.

And in the conduct of any public or private business what can be more pressing as an honorable obligation than that money not belonging to the Government paid under the circumstances here related should be at the earliest possible moment returned to the rightful and lawful owner?

I also append a brief résumé of the matter prepared by a gentleman interested in the matter. It is a splendid statement of the facts of the case, and includes also a list of importers who were required under similar circumstances to pay excessive duties and who have been repaid by the Government:

First. This bill provides for refund of the 15 per cent excess duty exacted by the Government and paid into the Treasury regarding which excess duty the Court of Claims in its decision, Senate Document No. 406, Sixty-third Congress, second session, page 8, filed with the Senate February 9, 1914, found was paid under "circumstances amounting to duress," and in House Report No. 701, page 3, of the 17th instant, reference is also made to the fact that "the title to the money involved in these claims never passed from the claimants."

Second. The retention of this money thus exacted and the remaining portion of it yet held by the Treasury has therefore no justification either in fact or in equity, every dollar of the amount being a direct loss of the principal to those paying the excess amount, to say nothing of the loss of interest, as also stated in said findings of the Court of Claims, Senate Document No. 406, page 7.

Third. After the United States Court had determined that the 15 per cent excess duty was not the legal rate and thus admitted by the Government, Congress passed an act January 9, 1903, providing for the refund of this excess duty paid into the Treasury. That it was the intention in that act of Congress to return the amounts thus improperly paid into the Treasury has never been questioned, as found by the Court of Claims, Senate Document No. 406, aforesaid.

Fourth. The records show that due diligence and perseverance has been exercised to secure the refund of the amounts not already returned to the lawful owners as provided in the present bill (S. 4398), and one of the refunds as provided in the present bill, the H. A. V. Post Estate item, was expressly mentioned in the act of 1903, but was not paid in full under that act owing only and solely to a misdescription of the name by a clerical error.

Fifth. The Treasury Department has always favored repayments of this excess duty to the rightful owners. At a hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Claims of the House, Sixty-first Congress, second session, Mr. G. W. Ashworth, a representative of the Treasury Department, speaking of these particular "steel bloom" remaining duty refunds, expressly stated, and that he felt perfectly justified in stating, that the Treasury Department "recommended" the passage of the bill providing for such refund payments.

Sixth. It may be stated without fear of contradiction that every Member of Congress and every fair-minded person in or out of Congress who has ever looked into the merits of this question concurs in this opinion of Mr. Ashworth in favoring the return of this money exacted from citizens which does not belong and never did belong, as found by the Court of Claims, to the Government.

Seventh. Under the acts of Congress of January 9, 1903 (32 Stat. L., 764), and of February 24, 1905 (33 Stat. L., 809) (see 40 C. C. Rep., 539; 41 C. C. Rep., 413 et seq.; 42 C. C. Rep., 541; 43 C. C. Rep., 596), refunds of this 15 per cent excess duty have already been made, as follows:

J. F. Bailey & Co	$77,462.55
H. E. Collins & Co	12,399.60
Carnegie Bros. & Co. (Ltd.)	29,737.20
Albany & Rensselaer Iron & Steel Co	2,259.30
Joliet Steel Co	138,878.25
Cleveland Rolling Mill Co	18,472.65

A. E. Godeffroy & Co	30,895.80
Springfield Iron Co., of Springfield, Ill. (this included claim of Clarke, Post & Martin, agents, etc., for $18,045.57)	45,936.64
Henry A. V. Post	6,015.18
Charles W. Matthews	23,106.75
Henry W. Oliver, jr	8,646.75
Schrader & Ellery	6,957.30
Diamond State Iron Co	23,278.95
Interstate Improvement & Construction Co	31,511.55
Charles H. & Eugene Odell, agents for Sandusky Rolling Mill & Manufacturing Co. and Northern Pacific Railroad Co	65,983.35
Northern Pacific Railroad Co	38,079.45
Edgemore Iron Co	8,222.10
Edward C. Smith	43,266.75
William Selfridge	12,627.75
Sam. E. Merwin, jr	20,400.56
Bates & Despard	1,247.10
Estate of Charles L. Perkins, liquidating partner of Perkins & Choate	18,894.75
Illinois Steel Co. as assignee	23,483.10

Eighth. The Treasury Department states that the amount already paid out in refunds under these two acts is $713,518.

Ninth. The three refunds embodied in the present bill (S. 4398) before the House being of exactly the same character are the only refunds remaining unpaid. Why, then, under every principle of fair and just dealing between the Government and its citizens should not the remaining refunds, as provided in Senate bill 4398, now before the House, be made without further delay?

Full particulars regarding the facts as above stated will be found in the RECORDS of Congress, the Court of Claims findings, and as concisely stated in House Report No. 701, May 17, 1916, from the Committee on Claims above mentioned.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that these importers were held up by the officials of the Government. They were made to stand and deliver, just as much so as any band of highwaymen ever robbed a victim. The court practically said as much when it held that these parties were forced by threats and intimidation to waive their rights to make protest. Surely this Government can not afford to sanction such a wrong to her citizens.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GRANT OF CERTAIN RIGHTS OF EASEMENT FOR RAILROAD PURPOSES.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent to take up, at this time, 291 on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take up at this time No. 291 on the Private Calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9856) granting to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, and to the Manufacturers' Railway Co. permission to transfer certain rights of easement for railway purposes heretofore granted by the United States to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co. and to the Anheuser-Bush Brewing Association, respectively.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does this do?

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, the only purpose of the bill, I will say to the gentleman, is to grant the permission of the Government to an exchange of certain parts of the rights of way provided in the grant by the Government, and it does not provide for the granting of any additional land.

This was part of the old arsenal grounds in the city of St. Louis. The Iron Mountain road was given a right of way through this property many years ago, and the Manufacturers' Railroad Co. operate some tracks on a part of this right of way. The Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, through permit granted by Congress, received a permission to use or put certain tracks upon this ground.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can make it short by saying these companies have authority to run railroad tracks over this ground, being specified. They want to rearrange their tracks, and this is a permission to rearrange the tracks which the Government officials say will be in the interest of the Government, as far as the rearrangement is concerned, and in the interest of the other people. The tracks are on the wrong side of each other, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. IGOE. The Board of Engineers of the War Department have approved of it, and they feel this special permission by Congress is necessary because of the original permission.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does it give away any authority now vested in the Government or make any further grant of any kind?

Mr. IGOE. Not at all.

Mr. RAGSDALE. It is just a transfer?

Mr. IGOE. It is simply a rearrangement to meet——

Mr. MANN. To give authority to shift the tracks.

Mr. IGOE. That is all it does, and the engineers say it will benefit the Government as well as the railroad companies.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the United States of America, heretofore by act of Congress, approved February 14, 1853, granted to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co. a right of way, 60 feet wide, over and across land owned or reserved for use by the United States in the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, being the land constituting the United States Arsenal Grounds, on which the St. Louis Arsenal was located, which said right of way is being used by the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. as lawful successor to and of said St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co. for and in maintaining and operating thereon various railroad tracks, with one of which tracks it serves the United States Engineers' depot located on that part of said St. Louis Arsenal property, which lies east of said right-of-way strip; and

Whereas the United States of America, heretofore by joint resolution of Congress, approved April 28, 1904, authorized the Secretary of War to, and he did thereupon, by grant dated August 3, 1904, grant or allow to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association a right of way for railroad purposes 40 feet in width, over and across said United States Arsenal Grounds in the city of St. Louis, Mo., said right of way lying west of and abutting the said right of way above referred to as that granted to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co., upon which 40-foot strip there have been built certain railroad tracks now operated by the Manufacturers' Railway Co. under lease or permit from said Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association; and

Whereas said Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association is not engaged in the railroad business, but is served as a shipper and receiver of freight by said Manufacturers' Railway Co., which is a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, and engaged as a common carrier in the transportation of freight moving in interstate commerce, on behalf of many others of the shipping public in the city of St. Louis, as well as on behalf of said brewing association; and

Whereas said Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., and Manufacturers' Railway Co., for the purpose of improving the track and traffic facilities used by each of said railways in its service of the public, have mutually agreed to sell and exchange certain strips of land or rights of way now used by said railways for railroad purposes, and to that end now desire the consent of the United States of America to the transfer of certain portions of each of said rights of way heretofore granted by the United States, as above recited: Now therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That permission is hereby granted to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association to transfer by sale or lease to the Manufacturers' Railway Co., its successors or assigns, all of the said title, rights, and easement heretofore granted or permitted to said Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, by or pursuant to said joint resolution of Congress approved April 28, 1904, and by grant of the Secretary of War, dated August 3, 1904, pursuant to said joint resolution.

SEC. 2. That permission is hereby granted to said Manufacturers' Railway Co., its successors or assigns, thereupon to transfer to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., its successors or assigns, that part of the said title, rights, and easements so to be acquired by said Manufacturers' Railway Co. under the last preceding paragraph hereof, which part relates to or affects the eastern 11½ feet of the said 40-foot right-of-way strip, thereby joining said 11½ feet to the said right of way of said St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co.

SEC. 3. That permission is hereby granted to said St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., its successors or assigns, to transfer to the Manufacturers' Railway Co., its successors or assigns, that part of the said title, rights, and easement granted by said act of Congress approved February 14, 1853, which part relates to or affects the eastern portion of the said 60-foot right-of-way strip, said eastern portion being a tract varying in width from a minimum of 15 feet to a maximum of 16 feet 1½ inches, thereby enabling said Manufacturers' Railway Co. to operate over said tract a railroad track as a part of its facilities.

SEC. 4. That the respective permits hereby granted by the above sections 2 and 3 shall not be availed of unless or until the written agreement hereinafter prescribed shall have been entered into by the Manufacturers' Railway Co., to the end that the freight service heretofore rendered to said United States Engineers' depot, from said track located upon said tract or eastern portion of said 60-foot right-of-way strip, may and shall hereafter be rendered from a switch track to be constructed by said Manufacturers' Railway Co., at its expense, into said United States Engineers' yard, for the exclusive service of the United States, namely: Said Manufacturers' Railway Co. shall enter into a written agreement with or for the benefit of the United States, in such form as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, obligating the Manufacturers' Railway Co., within such reasonable time as the Secretary of War may approve, to construct at its own cost and expense, and for the exclusive ownership and service of the United States, a switch track into or through said United States Engineers' depot property, along such line therein as shall be approved by the Secretary of War; also to build and maintain thereafter a track or tracks connecting with said switch track and extending from the said Engineers' depot property, to reasonably accessible points of connection with the tracks of, and for the free use of, the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. and of the Manufacturers' Railway Co.; also to erect at its own expense, on the south side of said United States Engineers' depot grounds, such reasonable gate or gates as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, if the latter shall request the construction of such gates, and to pay and protect the United States against all other expenses caused by the removal and rebuilding of the paint and oil house used by the United States and now located at or near Utah Street; all of said work to be done in a manner which shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 10, 1916.

Rev. Boyd V. Switzer, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee that through all of the years of our national life Thy great spirit has overshadowed us. We rejoice that Thou hast made us, and hast made us become a great people. To Thee, and to Thee alone, we give praise for all that we have wrought and for all that we have become. Thou, and Thou alone, art the One to whom we lift our hearts in praise and thanksgiving; and yet, our Father, Thou hast led us in these days face to face with great problems to be solved, and hast imposed upon us tremendous responsibilities. We realize that mere human ability is inadequate to cope with these things, but, O Lord, Thou who art the God of our fathers art our God also, and Thou wilt not fail us nor be deaf to the cry of our hearts.

Continue, we pray Thee, to inspire us with Thy spirit, and constantly, we pray Thee, give wisdom and courage and strength to all of Thy servants in authority in these United States, that they may be colaborers together with Thee in the fulfillment of Thy eternal plans for humanity, that this Nation in the highest sense may be a servant of the whole world, and disseminate and establish universal righteousness among all the nations, and so fulfill and complete the purpose of Him who is all and in all, lifting the whole world up to God. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS. I present a resolution of Brooks Local, American Society of Equity, of Brooks, Mont., in favor of certain legislation in behalf of homesteaders on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in Montana. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution of the Brooks Local of American Society of Equity, Brooks, Fergus County, Mont., and indorsed by the State Union.

Whereas the cooperative farmers of Montana, known as the American Society of Equity, realize that our country now stands in the midst of difficulties and deem it necessary that all farmers should be induced to raise all food possible; and

Whereas we find a vast area of fertile land on the Fort Peck Reservation practically uninhabited, on account of the present law requiring all homesteaders to pay from $2.50 to $7 per acre for said land, one-fifth to be paid at time of entry, the other four-fifths to be made in five annual payments; that said law is keeping actual settlers from this land: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we ask our Senators and Congressmen to introduce a law asking a reduction of one-half of the appraised value of said land and that 10 years extension of time be granted on all payments after the first one has been made, that being one-fifth down at time of entry.

We also ask that said law be made to cover all payments that have been made, with the exception of commitments, so that the actual settler who is on the land at the present time may receive the same benefits from time of their entry as those who are yet to homestead.

Whereas we consider this one of the first steps toward preparedness, we ask our Senators and Congressmen to act as soon as possible, as the planting time is near at hand, and through this law not only our States but our Government would be greatly benefited, as this is one of our greatest wheat belts.

JOSEPH F. VANEK, President,
Mrs. JULIA WILKERSON, Secretary,
Brooks Local of American Society of Equity.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition from the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School of East Helena, Mont., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, together with the signature, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TO UNITED STATES SENATE,
Care of Senator MYERS, Washington, D. C.:

Undersigned earnestly petition for the passage of Kenyon-Sims bill, or some other that will prevent the nullification of State antigambling laws by prohibiting the sending of race-gambling odds and bets from or into any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States.

Above petition was adopted by vote in the town of East Helena, State of Montana, by Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, and undersigned was authorized to so attest.

FLORENCE J. MADDRELL,
Superintendent Presiding.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have received a letter in the nature of a memorial from C. S. Butterfield, a very prominent banker in Mississippi and president of the First National Bank of Brookhaven, Miss., calling attention to some of the defects in our banking laws and to the clause of the reserve act requiring all banks to clear at par through the reserve bank. I ask that the communication be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Brookhaven, Miss., June 8, 1916.

Hon. JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reference to the clause of the reserve act requiring all banks to clear at par through the reserve bank.

You have, undoubtedly, heard something of the discussion in regard to this matter, and I desire to call your attention to the injustice of this proposition.

We first received a notice that this would be put in effect on June 15, but it has now been postponed until July 15. If this clause of the reserve act is enforced, it will wipe out all, or practically all, of the exchange, which the country banks are now collecting, and will be an irreparable loss, and I fear, will put many small country banks out of business.

The par clearance of checks through the reserve bank is not a fair nor equitable proposition. We are entitled to a reasonable charge for this service, and we trust that you will do what you can to prevent the enforcement of this clause of the act by securing an indefinite postponement of the matter.

Very truly, yours,

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BROOKHAVEN,
C. S. BUTTERFIELD, President.

Mr. SHAFROTH presented petitions of sundry citizens of New Jersey, praying for prohibition in the island of Porto Rico, which were referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $221,820 for all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

SPEECH OF REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM S. BENSON.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech of Rear Admiral William S. Benson, United States Navy, Chief of Naval Operations, delivered in response to the toast, "The Navy," at a dinner to the alumni given by the Naval Academy Graduates' Association Tuesday evening, June 1, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MANUFACTURE OF NITRATES.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in view of the voluminous discussion in which this body recently indulged during the consideration of the military reorganization bill, with reference to the establishment of a plant for the purpose of extracting nitrogen from the air, I desire to say that I have here in my hand an extract from the report of the proceedings of the Eighteenth Ordinary General Meeting, held within the Mechanics' Institute, Bridge Street, Bradford, England, Monday, the 28th of February, 1916, by the Bradford Dyers' Association (Ltd.), touching the matter of dyestuffs and high explosives. I think the report will be of infinite interest to the people of the United States, and as it is short, I ask that it may be printed as a public document without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, such will be the order.

ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very admirable address delivered by the Comptroller of the Currency, Hon. John Skelton Williams, before the annual convention of the Tennessee Bankers' Association at Chattanooga, Tenn., May 19, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order, without objection.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the purpose of those few of us who are present this morning seems to be to fill the RECORD with speeches from the outside. I dislike to object to the printing of anything which has been offered here to-day, but I saw my good friend from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] rise and heard him ask to have printed in the RECORD a pamphlet which I judge may occupy pages, though I do not know about it. I merely wish to protest against this kind of business at this time, and to say that if there be any further similar requests I hope we shall have a little debate upon them, for we can not spend time any better than in discussing the reasons for putting these matters into the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Vermont to intimate that this course of business would in any wise interfere with or trespass upon the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore made by the Senate?

Mr. PAGE. Not at all. I simply say that we are a few gathered together here, and we seem to be determined to present and ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a large amount of matter which it seems to me ought not to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the Senator from Vermont is so anxious for debate he might satisfy himself entirely by reading the proceedings, if he can secure them, of the night sessions of the peace conference between the two conventions now in session in Chicago.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, with reference to the comment made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] in regard to the matter I presented and asked to have printed in the RECORD, I will say to the Senator that I have only followed the precedent set by other Members of the Senate. I do not know why the Senator should have singled me out as he has, for I have only made the request for the printing of a pamphlet which contains a very excellent address, and one which I am sure the Senator from Vermont will be interested in reading.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I question very much whether this sort of proceeding is not in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement respecting the business of the Senate. I do not just now recall the terms of that unanimous-consent agreement——

Mr. THOMAS. I will read it to the Senator, if he desires.

Mr. WORKS. But it seems to me that any matter which calls for action on the part of the Senate, although it may be by unanimous consent, ought not to be brought before the Senate at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the unanimous-consent agreement reads, in part, as follows:

That between the said dates of June 3 and June 19 there shall be no action by the Senate on any pending measure, nor shall business of any kind be transacted other than the introduction of bills and resolutions, the presentation of petitions, and the reception of communications from the President and House of Representatives.

If the Senator feels that asking for the printing in the RECORD of the document which I offered, which consists of a speech, and, I think, a very important one, made at a dinner to the alumni given by the Naval Academy graduates by Admiral Benson, who is now the Chief of Naval Operations, is even indirectly a disregard of that unanimous-consent agreement, I desire to withdraw the request.

Mr. WORKS. I suggest to the Senator whether that is not so. Of course, the presentation of petitions calls for no action on the part of the Senate; the same thing is true with respect to bills; nobody could object to that; but when it is proposed to print something in the RECORD, that request does call for action on the part of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. President, I ask leave to withdraw the request which I made, because I do not want even to seem to disregard or violate the spirit, to say nothing of the letter, of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from California that the presentation of petitions always involves the question of consent to print those petitions in the RECORD, and that it would seem, therefore, that the reservation of the right to present petitions was inended to carry with it the privilege, if the Senate sees fit, to print the matter so presented.

Mr. WORKS. That may be so; but I have my doubt about it. I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that I am not saying this because I have any objection to the matter which he presented.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. WORKS. It only occurred to my mind that we were probably trespassing upon the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. THOMAS. I have too much respect for the Senator's views on any subject to attribute his action to any other than proper motives; but, on the other hand, I do not want even to seem to disregard or trespass upon the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement. There is no haste about the printing of the speech which I presented, and, with the consent of the Senate and of the Chair, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, regarding the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] with reference to the presentation of petitions——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One moment. After reading the unanimous-consent agreement the Chair is of the opinion that the publication of speeches and other matters of such character in the RECORD was not contemplated by the Senate when the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into. Of course the Chair has no control over the matter. As to questions of this character, it is for the Senate to decide on objection of any Senator. The Chair can not control the action of the Senate, but he feels constrained to say that, in his opinion, the Senate did not contemplate the publication of speeches. For instance, here is a speech which the Senator from Florida has sent up and which is quite lengthy.

Mr. WORKS. In view of what I have stated, I shall enter an objection, not because I have objection to any of the different documents which have been offered, for they may be entirely proper matter to go into the RECORD, but I make the objection on the ground I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To what does the Senator from California object?

Mr. WORKS. I object to the printing in the RECORD of any of the documents which have been presented, as that action calls for unanimous consent.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. President, I assume the permission granted will be withdrawn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, the little matter which I presented was not in any sense an address or a speech of anyone, but was an extract from the report of the proceedings of a convention held in Bradford, England, on the question of dyestuffs and high explosives, in which I felt the country was deeply interested, as we have just passed a bill providing for the establishment of a great plant to draw nitrogen from the atmosphere. However, I have no desire to press the request, and I respectfully ask that I may withdraw my request for the publication of the matter in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Consent to withdraw the request is given to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I withdraw the request which I made for the printing in the RECORD of the address presented by me. I do not wish to violate the rule; but no question was raised as to proceedings of this character at the session on last Thursday. The same thing was done at that time.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I had no idea that any Senator had any desire or intention of violating the unanimous-consent agreement, but it did occur to me that we were violating it unconsciously and unintentionally.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MYERS. To what day?

Mr. FLETCHER. In pursuance of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The adjournment must be taken for three days under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I move that the Senate adjourn until Tuesday next at 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the motion of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will change the motion, and move that the Senate adjourn until Wednesday next at 12 o'clock.

Mr. THOMAS. Sunday is a dies non.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The unanimous-consent agreement does not designate Sunday as a dies non. It says that adjournments shall be taken for three days, and we can just as easily adjourn until Tuesday and then until Friday and then until the following Monday.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection to that at all; but I know that it was contemplated that we should adjourn until Wednesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the unanimous-consent agreement fix the day of adjournment?

Mr. FLETCHER. It only says that adjournments shall be taken every third day. It reads in part:

> And that adjournment every third day shall follow until Monday the 19th day of June, 1916

It is a question of what is the third day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida, then, as the Chair understands, moves that the Senate adjourn until Tuesday at 12 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I make that motion.

Mr. FLETCHER. I made the motion that the Senate adjourn until Tuesday, but I have changed it, and make it Wednesday, because I think that would be in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement. I am inclined to think that Wednesday would be the proper day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia move that the Senate adjourn until Tuesday?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. I think we certainly will be adjourning for three days if we adjourn to that time. There is a dispute, as the Presiding Officer knows, in the other House as to whether Sunday is considered dies non in the meaning of the three-day adjournments referred to in the Constitution.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the difficulty in connection with the adjournment of the Senate was not due to the intervention of Sunday between our adjournment from last Saturday to the Thursday following. It was due to the fact that, even excluding Sunday, there was still a fourth day to be considered, which would be included in the computation either by the inclusion of Saturday or the inclusion of Thursday.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I was not referring to the recent criticism in the House of the action of the Senate, but to a controversy which has been going on in the House for quite a length of time, and in which a different view has been had upon this subject.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes. That controversy arose during the adjournments of Congress when Mr. Reed was Speaker, in order to force the action of the Senate. I am somewhat familiar with that controversy. I think the general trend of sentiment was that Sunday was a dies non.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield the floor to the Senator. I have no interest whatever in this matter. I do not care whether the Senate adjourns until Tuesday or until Wednesday. I do not think it is a question of any importance from a legal standpoint.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is simply a question of regularity, and a question of complying with the unanimous-consent agreement. The order is that we shall adjourn on Saturday, and that adjournments every third day shall follow until Monday, the 19th of June. It is simply a question of what is the third day. I am perfectly willing to leave that to the decision of the Chair, but it seems to me we have not any right to fix a day that is not the third day. If Tuesday is not the third day after to-day, then certainly we ought to adjourn until Wednesday; and it seems to me that Wednesday is the third day within the meaning of this agreement.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I would suggest that an adjournment from to-day until Tuesday, then until Friday, and then until Monday, would be literally every third day until the 19th day of this month, and it would be the only way in which the unanimous-consent agreement could be literally carried out; and that would do it exactly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state that this language has received an interpretation in regard to the time of adjournment, and Sunday has been regarded universally by the House and the Senate as a dies non. The question arose first during the consideration of the Dingley bill, when the House adjourned, and the adjournments were for three days, and were twice a week, not counting Sunday. That interpretation was looked up closely, and at that time it was concluded that it was clear, and it was followed by both Houses when adjournments took place.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before this matter is disposed of, lest from something that has been said it might be inferred that there was an opinion entertained by some Members of this body that the adjournment heretofore had was not authorized, I merely desire to say that the question involves two propositions: Whether Sunday is to be regarded as a dies non, and likewise whether the Constitution authorizes an adjournment which will leave three entire days intervening during which the Senate had not been in session at all.

I feel at liberty to say that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has given some attention to the question, and has entirely satisfied himself, and such investigation as I have been able to give it has satisfied me, that the adjournment heretofore had was entirely warranted by the Constitution, notwithstanding any view that may be entertained upon the subject in another branch of Congress. I have not undertaken to examine into the nature of the unanimous-consent agreement. I think it is the intention of the Senator from Virginia, when the Senate reassembles for the purpose of doing business, to have put in the RECORD the authorities which seem quite clearly to establish the proposition that the adjournment heretofore had by the Senate is entirely within the limits of the Constitution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Montana whether he is of the opinion that an adjournment from now until Tuesday would conform to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I should say so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the motion to the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Before that is done—I do not want to discuss it, but I desire to address an inquiry to the Chair. The unanimous-consent agreement provides for the reception of communications from the President and from the House of Representatives. We have received several bills from the House; and I wish to ask whether the Chair understands that while we may receive these bills from the House they can not be referred to committees?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair does not think so.

Mr. JONES. The Chair thinks that under the unanimous-consent agreement these bills from the House can be referred to the committees? If that is true, I just wanted to suggest that these bills from the House might be referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that we may receive messages from the House, but the Chair does not know whether or not we would be strictly conforming to it if we referred bills received in a message from the House.

Mr. JONES. That is the question upon which I wanted to secure the opinion of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it would be safer not to refer the bills.

Mr. JONES. It will be the understanding, then, that all messages from the House will simply be held?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It makes very little difference, because no progress would be made anyway.

Mr. JONES. I simply desired to understand that, so that I might not have to be here. There are one or two bills that have come from the House in the reference of which I am interested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that such bills can not be referred. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate adjourn until Tuesday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 13, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 10, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Rev. C. Everest Granger, D. D., pastor of Gunton Temple Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Maker, Sustainer, Preserver of all things, Giver of good, we meet in Thy name to-day, and in Thy name we desire to proceed with all our deliberations. We pray that Thou wilt direct us in the exercises of the hour and of the day, that all things may be done to Thy honor and to the betterment of mankind. Help us, we pray Thee, in life's way, that we may not simply be good, but good for something. Sanctify us through Thy truth. We pray that Thou wilt give us Thy mind, that we may have divine wisdom, and Thy heart, that we may look upon the needs of mankind and have a true fellowship and true brotherhood in life. Lead us in the way everlasting. Preserve us as a Nation and as individuals to do Thy will. Through Jesus Christ we ask it. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of prohibition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of prohibition. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

ELECTRIC SERVICE, ISLAND OF KAUAI, HAWAII.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9226) to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power within the Lihue district and the Koloa district, county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the same order prevail with reference to bills objected to—that they shall remain on the calendar—as was observed before.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that when a bill is objected to it goes over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does that mean all bills, Mr. Speaker, that are objected to?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill in form is just an act of Congress directly, and not approving an act of the Hawaiian Legislature. But I notice among the first things in it it says, "privilege for the term of 50 years from and after the approval of this act by the Congress of the United States." I assume it is reciting in fact an act of the legislature. Certainly we do not pass an act of Congress to say that it shall be approved by the Congress of the United States. That is what the act does itself.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman desires any information about that, if he will permit me, I will state that there was a bill which was passed by the Hawaiian Legislature and this Congress was asked to approve that bill, and there were some features in the bill that the committee could not see its way clear to approve, and there were several hearings had upon it. The bill in the shape in which it now is was very carefully considered on two different occasions by the entire committee and also thoroughly considered by the subcommittee. It is a privilege which the citizens of that district are exceedingly anxious to have. There are only about 10,000 people in that whole country.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Louisiana does not get the point I was making.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the gentleman refer to the time? There are only 10,000 people there, and all the territory is taken up which is available for cultivation. It is very limited in extent and also in population, and they thought it would be a great opportunity for them to have the privilege of putting an electric-light plant there. They have been waiting since 1913 for that privilege.

Mr. MANN. I was referring to the form of the bill. I assume, although there is no statement to that effect in the bill or the report, that the Territorial legislature passed an act which under the organic act we are required to approve. This bill is not in the form of an approval of an act of the Territorial legislature. Here is section 17, the last section of the bill. Here is the way it reads:

> That this act shall take effect and be law from and after the date of its approval by the governor of the Territory of Hawaii, subject, however, to the approval of the Congress of the United States.

In other words, if we pass this bill, it would not take effect until it had been approved by the governor of the Territory of Hawaii and after it had received the approval of Congress.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman permit me one moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. If the gentleman will look at page 12 of the Senate bill, which I ask to have substituted for the House bill, section 17 says that this act shall take effect on and after the date of its approval by the governor, subject, however, to the approval of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Has the Senate bill been reported?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes; it has been passed. I do not understand it has been reported here.

Mr. MANN. Where is it on the calendar? I am frank to say I have not seen the Senate bill.

Mr. WATKINS. I will hand to the gentleman a copy of it. Here it is.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is reported in the Senate. I do not know whether the Senate has passed it or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think this bill ought to lie over until we know what it is. Manifestly you can not pass it in the shape it is in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

D. K. HEMPSTEAD DESIGNATED AS ACTING CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
> CLERK'S OFFICE,
> Washington, D. C.
> Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
> Speaker.
> SIR: Desiring to be absent from my office for a short period of time, I hereby designate D. K. Hempstead, one of my assistants, to act in my official capacity during my absence.

LEASE OF LANDS, FORT KEOGH MILITARY RESERVATION, MONT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3101) authorizing the Secretary of War to extend the lease issued under the act of August 23, 1912, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, and for a right of way thereto for the removal of gravel and ballast material."

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the chairman of the committee, or whoever may have the bill in charge, give some information in regard to it.

Mr. EVANS. I have not the bill in charge, but I know about it.

Mr. CULLOP. From the title of it I notice that the right is given to remove gravel and ballast material from this tract of land. Is that for commercial purposes?

Mr. EVANS. It is for ballasting their road.

Mr. CULLOP. They are taking the material out of the Government reservation for their own use?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. What is the pay proposed?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know what the pay is. The road at the present time has leased a 40-acre tract, and this is the recommendation of the War Department, to extend it to a tract of about 240 acres. The road runs through a prairie country where there is no gravel accessible, or reasonably so.

Mr. CULLOP. That is one reason why it should be very valuable to the Government, and the Government ought to receive a very handsome income from it. The railroad seems to realize the value, and desires a much larger tract.

Mr. EVANS. I really do not know what the income is, but this is under the recommendation of the Secretary of War, and I fancy that under the circumstances they would get a reasonable compensation for it.

Mr. CULLOP. I see no mention here, and if no one can give any idea of what the compensation is, I think the bill should go over. I hope some one will enlighten the House in this matter. I do not believe it a wise policy for the Government to give away valuable property, without compensation.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. This is the Milwaukee gravel-pit proposition. I want to say to the gentleman that this is a peculiar condition, in that the gravel is in mounds above the level of the ground, and the taking of the gravel from these mounds results in leveling the ground. It does not leave the open pit that is usual in the taking of gravel. For that reason the War Department is perfectly willing that the railroad shall perform for the department the service of leveling off this military reservation.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] that when the period of road building comes in Montana there will be a very great demand for this material, and it will command a very good price. For one I do not think that the Government ought to give it away at this time. In other States where they have gravel it sells at a good price, and is much in demand, because it is a very valuable material in road building, and the road building will sooner or later be in operation in Montana, when all of this material will be very much in demand. As this is in mounds above the ground it can be furnished at little expense, and hence is the more valuable for this reason.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. I would just like to say that the Mountain States, such as Montana and the western portion of the State in which I reside, have worlds of road material, mountains of rock and limestone, to such an extent that it is of no commercial value. The towns get all they want in their immediate vicinities simply for the taking of it.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; but this is so much cheaper and they can build good roads for less cost out of it. It makes a splendid road, and the cheaper the material the better it is for the people who must bear the expense.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to state that I am familiar with these so-called gravel prairies. We have a number of them in the State of Washington.

Mr. CULLOP. Then the gentleman is very fortunate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In many cases the gravel is in mounds, in excess of what could be used either in railroad building or road building in a hundred years, easily.

Mr. CULLOP. The trouble is that we expect the State of Washington to be on the map a good deal longer period than a hundred years, and they will be needing the material there longer than that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object. The use of some of this gravel—a comparatively small amount—to ballast a railroad the development of which permits people to come into the country and settle it up so that they may later want roads, is a part of the development that we need so much in the West.

Mr. CULLOP. In my country gravel lands sell from three to five hundred dollars an acre without removing the gravel, and then they have to add the cost of removal, so that this is a very valuable material, and the people of those sections are most fortunate in this respect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In my district there are many thousands of tons in mounds, in mountains, and on prairies.

Mr. CULLOP. I can say to the gentleman from Washington that they will be needing all of that for the building of roads in time, and that it is a very valuable material, and it ought not to be given away by the Government. It should receive adequate compensation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We gave authority to this company to take gravel from 40 acres of land if they would build a sidetrack to it and deliver 50 carloads of gravel a year to the Government at Fort Keogh. That has been done, or is being done now. The 40 acres of gravel are about used up, and they want authority, and this bill would give authority, to continue the work of taking an additional amount of gravel practically upon the same terms. The Government wants the use of the gravel at Fort Keogh and in this way obtains it for nothing. It is of no value except for a purpose of this kind.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand. It may not be of any value now, but in the near future it will be a very valuable property.

Mr. MANN. They are paying well for it now, I will say to the gentleman. This matter was originally arranged by the War Department, as I recollect, for the purpose of getting gravel delivered to the Government for nothing. These people are offering to continue the arrangement which the War Department is anxious to have them continue, because they want the use of the gravel, and because the railroad has its track and approaches already there. It is distinctly in the interest of the Government.

Mr. CULLOP. I see that this provides an extension for a term of 10 years.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. In 10 years this ought to become very valuable if it is a rapidly growing community, because they will need it in building roads and the construction of streets.

Mr. MANN. There is plenty of gravel up there, as far as that is concerned, and it is of no value except for this purpose. The Government gets the benefit of this 50 carloads a year.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Has the gentleman from Indiana ever been over that country and inspected these gravel beds?

Mr. CULLOP. I have not.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I have been all over that country and have spoken in almost every important town. There are hundreds of miles there where you can not build a road without removing the gravel. I am telling the gentleman the sacred truth, and I will ask the gentleman from Washington if that is not so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. If the Government can get the ground leveled down without expense, it is doing well.

Mr. MANN. This bill is urged by the military authorities, because in this way they can get the gravel practically for nothing. Of course, the Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. can get plenty of gravel in other places.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The Government will continue to get the same amount of gravel in the future that it has in the past?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And delivered exactly where it wants it?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And so the railroad company is paying for the gravel that it uses?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that all public utilities are reimbursed by the patrons of the service for every dollar that they put out?

Mr. MANN. That is true, but I do not think that is any reason for giving a railroad something for nothing.

Mr. SIMS. No; but where there is so much gravel, if the Government gives them something that they would otherwise have to pay for, the patrons do not have to reimburse the company to that extent. I do not see why we should not give it to them.

Mr. MANN. I am not interested in the railroad, but this is something that the military authorities want for the benefit of the Government.

Mr. CULLOP. What occurs to me is that this gravel is very valuable road material, and where they are building public roads it is in demand and commands a good price. When this country is settled up and the population is as dense as it is in some of the other States of the Union they will need this gravel. If they give it away now or sell it for a nominal price, the time will come when they will regret it very much because of the need they will have for it in building roads and streets.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman; but here is a hill of gravel on the Fort Keogh Military Reservation. It never will be sold to anybody, and by this means we get the gravel delivered for nothing on the tracks where the military authorities want it. So it seems to me better for the Government to get it in this way than to procure it somewhere else.

Mr. CULLOP. Suppose the Government goes into the business of building roads, as proposed by some gentlemen, with an expenditure of millions, then it will have this gravel to reduce the cost of the expenditure.

Mr. MANN. I can see the gentleman's point, not quite so strong in his district as it is in some parts of Illinois. If we had this gravel in Illinois, it would be very valuable, because we have nothing of the sort there. The gentleman does have some gravel in Indiana.

Mr. CULLOP. Some of the very best.

Mr. MANN. We do not have; but out here in this locality, the military reservation, what they want is dirt and not gravel. If they could transfer some of the gravel to Indiana and Illinois and get in exchange some of our good black dirt, it would be valuable to them.

Mr. CULLOP. We have as fertile land in Indiana as they have in Illinois, but perhaps not quite so much, only so because Indiana has not as much territory as Illinois. This is valuable material not only for building purposes, but in constructing roads. If they give it away now, when they come to build the roads their product will be gone and it will cost the public just that much more.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think that they need a little of this sand in Chicago for the convention?

Mr. CULLOP. Well, they seem to have got some of it there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object. I reluctantly withhold the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to extend the area covered by the lease issued under the act approved August 23, 1912, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, and for a right of way for the removal of gravel and ballast material," so as to include 241.67 acres, with necessary rights of way, for a term of 10 years from the approval of this act, in the name of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., a corporation of the State of Wisconsin (the grantee and successor in interest of said former lessee), for the purposes and under the conditions imposed by the provisions of said act of August 23, 1912.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ANTIGAMBLING LAWS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15949) to prevent the nullification of State antigambling laws by international or interstate transmission of race-gambling bets or of racing odds.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ROUSE. I object.

WIND RIVER RESERVATION SHOSHONES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 489) authorizing the Shoshone Tribe of Indians residing on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter that has been before the House for quite a number of years. The Shoshone Indians feel that they have valid claims against the Federal Government, and I have been hoping that as the bill has been favorably reported it could be passed at this time, in order that the claims of these Indians might be tried in the Court of Claims.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not that the old——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LIEU LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15096) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the settlement of the lieu-land claims of the Western and Intermountain States is a matter that has been pending for quite a number of years. The situation is very trying. Even those States that have had no controversy with the Federal Government or among their own people in regard to their lieu selections have been unable to have those selections certified, because of questions that have arisen in other States by reason of the decisions of the courts and otherwise. My own State has had no question or contest with the department. I think the department could certify our selections at any time very properly, but they refuse to do so until the general question of lieu selections is settled. I do not think the bill that the committee have reported is a perfect measure, but I am sure the committee have done the very best they could under the circumstances, and have reasonably well worked out a rather complicated situation. I hope the bill can be considered at this time, as all of our Western States and their citizens are suffering by reason of the failure to settle these questions of lieu selections. Some of these lands have been selected for 10 or 12 years. Supposing there was no question as to the validity of these selections, the States have, in many cases, leased or sold, or agreed to sell, these lands. Upon some of them valuable improvements have been made, and much loss and hardship results from the delay and uncertainty as to securing title.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to supplement what the gentleman from Wyoming has said. He has not now the honor of being a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, but that committee are very much interested in this measure, which applies to all the Western States. The question of the selection of the State lieu lands is held up, and is absolutely at a standstill, and nothing can be done until Congress acts upon it. We have thrashed out this matter exhaustively for months, and this is a bill that seems to meet the approval as far as it can of the department and the people of that country. I earnestly hope the House may pass it.

Mr. RAKER. In regard to this bill, gentlemen, the legislation has been pending for some time. The committee had exhaustive hearings on the matter. In addition to the taking of the testimony, the committee went over the subject thoroughly. The departments have made an exhaustive report, and the conditions as they affect the 13 States are set out in detail. The amount of the land that is affected in each State is set out. The States through their legislatures and at the present time through their governors and their various land boards have gone over the pending bill and have approved it. In addition to that, not only the Department of the Interior but the Department of Agriculture have finally agreed upon this legislation as being fair to the Government and fair to each State.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact: There have been at least four hearings in regard to California in particular before the General Land Office prior to this time, and the Government has thrashed out with the State authorities all the matters that are affected so far as the lands involved in California and also in the other States are concerned. All the members from the States involved are cognizant of this legislation. Their State officials are cognizant of it, as is the department; and after these exhaustive hearings we have gotten the matter in shape now so that we fully protect the Government in every detail, and permit the States to get only what belongs to them, in some instances yielding to the higher use of any of this land to which it might be put, in the way of water-power sites, rights of way, and for other purposes that the Government might see fit to withdraw it for before the selections are approved. I hope, and I know my hopes are not in vain, that we may be able to get this legislation through the House and over to the Senate. If there was no objection, we could do it to-day. There ought not to be any objection, because it is so fair, and I trust the gentleman may see his way clear this time to let us pass this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, it is indeed an ingenuous and simple-minded man who would honestly, candidly think he could pass a bill like this through the House by unanimous consent. The gentleman says there have been exhaustive hearings by the Committee on the Public Lands. If that is the case, it is important enough for the House to consider it and not pass it by unanimous consent without consideration. The report on the bill is nearly 75 pages long. There are a dozen amendments to it. It involves the giving up of a great deal of land by the Government to the States in lieu of land which the States can not get; and to expect to pass it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar shows a hopefulness beyond conception.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. MANN. I did not interrupt the gentleman. The gentleman from California is one in whom hope springs eternal, but he knew when this bill was put on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent that it would not pass by unanimous consent. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I want simply to say, in answer to the gentleman, that those who have had sufficient time to investigate it and have gone into it thoroughly, who two or three years ago thought there might be some question, because in California alone there were some contests, have now come to the conclusion that this bill is all right. Those contests have all been disposed of by the courts, and there are now no adverse claimants. I simply desire to ask the gentleman if it would not have caused hopes to spring in the breast of any man when all the departments, after a full investigation, have recognized and become convinced that the States' rights are proper, that the Government is protected, and that all the States which have land involved in this through their State authorities believe in and sanction this legislation, and all the Members from the West recognize and sanction this legislation. Why, if I did not have hopes of its passing on the Unanimous Consent Calendar now I never saw a bill about which I did have such hopes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is disingenuous. All the western Members, all of the gentlemen representing States trying to get lands away from the Government, are in favor of this bill. I do not doubt it. That of itself is a suspicious circumstance. These States get the land. They take it away from the rest of the country, possibly take it away from some settlers, but that fact shows that it is a bill that ought to be considered in the House and not passed without consideration.

Mr. RAKER. When you can get the consensus of some 40 people, competent men, who believe in maintaining the rights of the Government, and after full investigation realize that this is proper legislation——

Mr. MANN. I appreciate that, but I have not any doubt I could get the consent of all the Members of the House from Chicago on both sides, both Republicans and Democrats, in favor of taking out a million or so dollars for the benefit of Chicago, but could I get the consent of the gentleman from California without thought on the subject?

Mr. RAKER. There is a full report here showing everything.

Mr. MANN. I have read the report and the bill. I do not profess to be extremely bright about such things, but to save my soul I can not tell what is meant by the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold his objection just for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to create an impression in the House which is not entirely accurate, and I am sure he does not desire to do so, in regard to the bill. The bill does not, as a matter of fact, give any of the Western States any lands they are not recognized by practically everyone as being entitled to. The difficulty arises out of the fact that in the State of California some question arose as to just how far and in what manner lieu selections should be made; no question as to the right of the State to the acreage of lands and to make lieu selections. The question was as to the meaning and proper interpretation of the lieu-selection statute. The question arose in a little different form in the State of Washington, where a case was taken to the United States court. That was not a question of the right of the State to make the lieu selections, but as to the manner and the place where the selections might be made. Now, this bill attempts to clear up those questions which grew out of the two decisions—one in California and one in Washington. I think it settles the questions in a way that is fair both to the Federal Government and the State. It does not give the States any more land than everyone admits the States are entitled to. It does attempt to settle certain questions as to the location and character of lieu selections.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not admit the States are entitled to it, and I have examined the matter for several years very carefully. A great many people do not admit the States are entitled to take very valuable land as lieu-land selections in place of less valuable land. A great many people do not admit it.

Mr. MONDELL. The question of the value of the land, I will say to my friend, is not involved, except in that the rule laid down in this bill would give the States in some instances less valuable land than they would otherwise have been able to secure.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not true the lands now left available are of very inferior quality, and is it not also true that under the terms of this bill that the States surrender the minerals in the land and also leaves that to the Federal Government, so as a matter of fact the States get the worst of the trade——

Mr. MANN. Of course we all believe that.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Has consent of the House been given?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not; and that is now the question as to whether unanimous consent shall be given. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 348) to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if this proposed park is within a forest reserve?

Mr. RAKER. I did not hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is the tract proposed to be made into a national park within the confines of a forest reserve?

Mr. RAKER. Practically all; yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, if the national-park bill, which has been proposed, be considered and passed, would not that take care of this proposition and preserve it for national-park purposes without actually making it a park?

Mr. RAKER. No, sir. You have to create your park, and if the park service is created then it takes care of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all those certain tracts, pieces, or parcels of land lying and being situate in the State of California and within the boundaries particularly described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the northeast corner of section 3, township 31, range 6 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California; thence southerly to the southeast corner of said section; thence easterly to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 11, said township; thence southerly to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 14, said township; thence easterly to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 24, said township; thence southerly to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 25, said township; thence westerly to the southwest corner of section 26, said township; thence southerly to the southeast corner of section 34, said township; thence westerly along the sixth standard parallel north, allowing for the proper offsets, to the northeast corner of section 3, township 30 north, range 6 east; thence southerly to the southeast corner of section 27, said township; thence west-

SEC. 2. That said park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States as he may deem necessary or proper for the care, protection, management, and improvement of the same; such regulations being primarily aimed at the freest use of the said park for recreation purposes by the public and for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, and natural curiosities or wonders within said park and their retention in their natural condition, as far as practicable, and for the preservation of the park in a state of nature, so far as is consistent with the purposes of this act. He shall provide against the wanton destruction of the fish and game found within said park and against their capture or destruction for purposes of merchandise or profit, and generally shall be authorized to take all such measures as shall be necessary to fully carry out the objects and purposes of this act. Said Secretary may, in his discretion, execute leases to parcels of ground not exceeding 10 acres in extent at any one place to any one person or persons or company for not to exceed 20 years when such ground is necessary for the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors, and to parcels of ground not exceeding 1 acre in extent, and for not to exceed 20 years, to persons who have heretofore erected, or whom he may hereafter authorize to erect, summer homes or cottages. Such leases or privileges may be renewed or extended at the expiration of the terms thereof. No exclusive privilege, however, shall be granted within the park except upon the ground leased. The regulations governing the park shall include provisions for the use of automobiles therein and the reasonable grazing of stock.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior may also sell and permit the removal of such matured or dead or down timber as he may deem necessary or advisable for the protection or improvement of the park.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may exact such charges as he deems proper for leases and all other privileges granted hereunder.

SEC. 5. That no appropriation for the maintenance, supervision, or improvement of said park in excess of $10,000 annually shall be made unless the same shall have first been expressly authorized by law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 7, line 8, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from California if the State has ceded jurisdiction to the Federal Government over the lands covered by forest?

Mr. RAKER. Not yet.

Mr. MONDELL. That is contemplated, I understand?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if section 2 of the bill would be operative in all respects until jurisdiction was ceded. I assume it is contemplated that the Legislature of California will cede jurisdiction?

Mr. RAKER. That will be the purpose of it—to bring it fully within its highest use and make it so it will be in the same condition as the other parks.

Mr. MONDELL. And when that is done, the further legislation that has been had with regard to the other parks, accompanying the act of cession, will be had?

Mr. RAKER. You mean in regard to the park service bill?

Mr. MONDELL. After complete cession of jurisdiction by the State it will, of course, be necessary to provide ways and means for the enforcement of the Federal laws and regulations?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes; surely.

Mr. MONDELL. That will be done, I assume, after the State has ceded jurisdiction?

Mr. RAKER. It is the purpose to make it so that it will be beneficial to the Government and to the people of this country.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I think this bill is of some importance. The gentleman ought to tell us something about the size of this park and the physical characteristics of it, and why it is made into a national park.

Mr. RAKER. I can do so, but I did not want to take the time of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope the gentleman will do so.

Mr. RAKER. I will briefly. The proposed park covers in the neighborhood of 89,000 acres, and in all this territory there are about 800 acres that are not in private ownership, so it is practically in shape so that it can be handled with little trouble. The elevation of the lowest place is about 5,000 feet, and it goes from that higher up. It has within its confines what is known as the old extinct crater, one of the latest in the country. That is, it is the only live volcano in the United States to-day. Among other attractions are such as Manzinita Lake, covering about four or five hundred acres, and Juniper Lake, Lake Tillman, Lake Bidwell, Snag Lake, the latter covering a couple of hundred acres. Some of the old prehistoric trees that were there thousands of years ago are still sticking out of the lake.

Then there are the boiling springs. By the side of those boiling springs, within a distance of 3 or 4 feet, there is cold, ice water. And then we have the Twin Lakes and Crumbo Lake, and we have ice caves and what are known as the glass lakes. And, then, in addition to that is this wonderful formation caused by the volcanoes. And leading up to this territory on all sides are the wonderful ravines and canyons, with their beautiful, little, trickling streams of pure water, with fish in some of them, and at an elevation that gives us a view all over the country.

Mr. BORLAND. This park is in the Sacramento Valley, is it not?

Mr. RAKER. It is accessible from the Sacramento Valley a distance of 60 miles, and is in plain view for some 200 miles in the Sacramento Valley—commencing down the Sacramento until it leaves the valley, and leads into the gorge leading on to Portland.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it in contemplation of any of the State roads in the gentleman's State?

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman that one of the State roads that I had the pleasure of working on for a considerable time last year goes right to the base of this mountain. The State highway that goes from Susanville to Red Bluff connects the main State highways with this particular territory. The counties of Lassen, Plumas, Shasta, and Tehama last year, through their constituted authorities, applied for bonds, ranging from $250,000 to $500,000 to work these roads. In the valley there is a contemplated highway from Alturas down Pitt River, a distance of 170 miles. Modoc County has applied for its apportionment, $300,000; Lassen County, $300,000; and Shasta County the same, to make a State highway and connecting with the main State highway in the Sacramento Valley at Redding. In addition to that it is the only line that leads across the continent that, after it reaches the summit, you are on the down grade every foot of the way, without an adverse grade, and a highway that you can travel 12 months in the year. We expect to make this road from the Sacramento Valley, from Alturas—and we have already a part of the road built from Alturas into the valley—so that it will reach the Lincoln Highway and make a natural road from the east down through this country.

The greater portion of this area is above 7,000 feet in elevation, and the rest, with a comparatively narrow strip in Los Molinos and Warner Canyons, is above the 6,000-foot elevation. It is nearly all in public domain, and the area described includes a great succession of natural wonders, among which the committee mentions the following features:

The only example of recent volcanic activity in continental United States, and at this time showing greater activity than at any time for probably hundreds of years.

Lassen Peak, 10,437 feet elevation (now showing activity).

North Peak, of the Lassen group, over 8,600 feet elevation.

Southwest Peak, over 9,200 feet elevation.

Prospect Peak, a beautiful mountain near the Lassen County line, over 9,200 feet elevation.

Cinder Cone, 6,907 feet elevation.

The Devil's Half Acre—hot springs and geysers.

Bumpass hot springs, Morgan hot springs, and numerous unnamed hot springs.

Sulphur springs.

Mineral springs, not analyzed, so far as the committee knows.

Giant springs of crystal pure waters.

MANY BEAUTIFUL MOUNTAIN LAKES.

Among them, Manzanita Lake, Juniper Lake, Lake Tillman, Lake Bidwell, Snag Lake, Twin Lakes, and Crumbo Lake.

Many interesting ice caves, glass lakes (obsidian or volcanic glass).

Numerous brooks and mountain streams abounding in trout. Many of the lakes are also stocked.

Beautiful and majestic caverns, particularly Warner Canyon, which cuts into the lava for nearly two-thirds of a mile below Juniper Lake and Los Molinos Canyon, with almost vertical walls, several thousand feet into the ancient lavas of Mount Lassen.

All these streams and lakes are fed by perpetual snow-clad peaks.

Another feature of importance will be the advantage of a game park, where deer, quail, and grouse will be unmolested and permitted to increase as in the past.

A park at this point will be readily accessible from the Southern Pacific Railroad in the upper Sacramento Valley or from the Western Pacific Railroad on the Feather River and from the Southern Pacific Railway by way of Susanville and Westwood, in Lassen County. It is accessible now by means of a number of fairly good trails; also wagon roads only 8 or 10 miles from the southern boundaries, in Tehama County, and into the reserve suggested at Manzanita Lake, about 7 miles by trail from the summit of Lassen Peak; and an automobile stage is now making this run from Redding, carrying tourists, and one from Susanville and Westwood.

On May 30, 1914, Mount Lassen broke out actively in volcanic eruption and has been in process of eruption at intervals ever since and has attracted the attention of the civilized world as being the only active volcano south of Alaska and on the American Continent. A report was made by Dr. Diller in the Lassen Peak Folio No. 15 and Bulletin No. 79, A Late Volcanic Eruption in Northern California and Its Peculiar Lava, both containing articles relating to the cinder cone of Lassen Peak and the many natural wonders surrounding this territory, which bulletins show that before the present active eruption of Mount Lassen it has been quiet for over 200 years, from the best information that could be received.

Dr. Diller and other members of the Geological Survey have given lectures on Mount Lassen and its volcanic eruption in many of the cities in the East, which have attracted many people to this territory and which was visited last year by many interested in the phenomena and natural wonders within the proposed boundaries of the park.

The State of California voted bonds to the amount of $18,000,000 for State highways, which is to build two main trunk lines from the northern to the southern part of the State and laterals from each county seat to the main trunk line through the great San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys. There is now in process of construction a lateral from Susanville to Red Bluff, which will go through one part of the proposed park; another lateral from Alturas to Redding, north of the proposed park, but it will be accessible. This road is also in process of construction. There will also be a State highway from Quincy to Oroville. With the crossroads from these lateral highways to the main trunk line in the Sacramento Valley it will make the park accessible to thousands of people who desire to visit and see and enjoy the natural wonders of the region proposed to be converted into a national park. The people of California will vote for $15,000,000 more for roads this coming November, 1916.

The pendency of these bills in Congress for the creation of this park has stimulated an active interest in northern California in the way of building roads and trails to assist the Government in making this territory accessible. The creation of this park will add another beauty spot and playground for the people of America as well as those who visit America from abroad; the slogan now being, "See America first."

These parks are not only an asset to the State in which they are located but a great asset to the National Government, and the committee believes it will redound to the benefit of the Congress that creates a national park out of such wonderful territory with its natural beauties and surroundings to the end that it may be preserved for all times for the benefit of the people.

It is easily accesible from the towns and cities in the Sacramento Valley, from Oroville north where those who are traveling in California may take a side trip with ease and comfort as well as giving an opportunity to thousands of the citizens in California to go from the valley to the mountains where real beauty and natural wonders and curiosities exist. It will add to the health and prolong the life of many who take the opportunity to make the visit.

By creating it into a park and the upbuilding of roads and making it accessible, with hotels and accommodations as are provided for in national parks, it will be used to a very great extent.

Dr. Johnson, of Columbia University, has the following to say of the Lassen Peak region:

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY,
New York, January 18, 1916.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RAKER: Your letter of January 15 reached me several days ago, and I am glad to note your interest in the question of setting aside the Lassen Peak territory as a national park.

The Lassen Peak region has been long known to the public through the writings of Dr. Diller, of the United States Geological Survey, and others, who have described the natural wonders of that interesting locality. If you will take the trouble to examine the textbooks in geology and geography used in the schools and colleges throughout the country you will find frequent references, in the sections dealing with volcanic phenomena, to Lassen Peak, the cinder cone just east of its base, the racent lava flow associated with the latter, and other features of volcanic origin in the district. All these, it should be noted, indicate a general interest in the region before the renewed activity of the mountain concentrated public attention on the Lassen Peak country.

In planning an itinerary for a geological and geographical excursion to the principal points of interest in the West last summer I considered a trip to Lassen Peak of the highest importance, in spite of the additional expense involved in going so far aside from the route we should otherwise have followed. Events justified this decision, for I found in talking and corresponding with prospective members of the excursion that the Lassen Peak visit was proving one of the most, if not the most, attractive item in the itinerary. The excursion was originally planned for a party of 8 or 10 advanced students and teachers of geology and geography. An unexpected interest in the project developed, however, and a total of 33 men and women participated, 28 of whom made the entire trip, lasting two months, and including visits to the Yellowstone Park, Glacier National Park, the Lake Chelan country, Crater Lake National Park, the Yosemite Valley, Lassen Peak, Pikes Peak, and the Garden of the Gods, with a special side trip to the Grand Canyon and the Petrified Forest. Among the members of my party were Prof E. C. Jacobs, of the University of Vermont, Burlington, Vt.; Prof. C. W. Brown, of Brown University, Providence, R. I.; Prof. Florence Bascom, of Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pa.; Prof. Ida H. Ogilvie, of Barnard College, New York City; Prof. A. C. Boyle, of the University of Wyoming, Laramie, Wyo.; and Miss Dora Keen, of Philadelphia, mountain climber and explorer. I am sure any of these will be glad to give you their impressions of the Lassen Peak country. The party was unanimous in enthusiastic praise of the beauties and wonders of the mountain and its associated volcanic phenomena, and the impression was general that no part of the excursion had been more interesting and profitable.

Mount Lassen itself is one of the great volcanoes of the Pacific coast, its sides deeply scored by impressive canyons, in which the evidences of glacial action are strongly shown. Approach to the mountain is not difficult, and we found the rail trip northward to Susanville through the desert and along the shores of Pyramid Lake, with its ancient terraces indicating a former high level of the lake waters, extremely fascinating. The auto trip from Susanville to the base of the mountain was alone sufficient to justify the time and money spent in this part of our excursion, the wonderful scenery and the majestic pine forests providing abundant interest for every mile of the journey. Tourist traffic to the region is already sufficiently great to justify several ranchmen in keeping a large supply of well-broken saddle horses, and I was more than gratified at the manner in which my large party, including a number of ladies, was cared for during the horseback trip over the 7-mile trail to the summit. It was no inconsiderable task to transport this party to and from the summit in such wild country without danger of accident to any member, yet this was done. From the summit we had magnificent views of the northern Sierras, the Cascades, the distant Coast ranges, and the mountains of the Great Basin—a panorama which for grandeur can be equaled at but few places in the country. The products of recent volcanic activity, the escaping steam and gases, the ruined forests for miles to the eastward, marking the path of the great blast which swept destruction before it, reminding one of the similar blast which destroyed San Pierre, Martinique; all bore witness to the activities of that force of nature, which has always inspired man with the greatest awe and wonder. To be able to view such phenomena in our own country with ease and safety is one of the striking merits of the Lassen Peak locality

Within easy reach of the mountain base are boiling lakes and springs, mud volcanoes, and other evidences of volcanic heat which appeal most strongly to the imagination of every visitor. By means of saddle horses the entire party also visited the remarkable Cinder Cone erupted a few hundred years ago, and which is a short distance to the east of the main peak. From the base of this cone there spread out lava flows whose fresh, rugged surfaces give every appearance of having been erupted yesterday, and which are in reality less than a hundred years old. The opening in the vase of the Cinder Cone from which the lava poured forth is still well preserved, and easily accessible to the visitor. The sides of the cone are easily climbed, and from the summit one may look down into a double crater as perfectly preserved and as symmetrical as though the eruption had just ceased. On all sides of the cone are the greyish white ash deposits which, descending upon the surrounding forest, burned and killed the trees, leaving the trunks still standing as monuments to the disaster which overtook them. Close by is Snag Lake, of particular interest to the tourist because he can plainly see the lobe of the lava flow which recently dammed the valley to form the lake, while from the lake waters project the "snags" or trunks of trees drowned by the rising waters and not yet rotted away.

On the whole, it is difficult to imagine a region where the more striking phenomena of nature are developed on a grander scale or in a manner calculated to appeal more strongly to the average individual. The Lassen Peak country is so exceptional that it has always justified special protection because of the natural wonders included in the area and the excellent camping sites which favor the summer visitor. The recent activity of the volcano has simply added to the wonders already existing in the district and has made the country known to all our citizens through the columns of the daily press. I sincerely hope that our Representatives will see fit to place the area in question in the group of our national playgrounds.

Very truly yours, DOUGLAS W. JOHNSON,
Associate Professor of Physiography.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEBB). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINERAL RESOURCES OF CERTAIN NATIONAL FORESTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12885) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to permit the prospecting, development, and utilization of the mineral resources of certain national forests.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois reserve his right to object for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], who is temporarily absent, and it undertakes to permit prospecting in the national forests which have been created under the Weeks law.

It seems that in the southern Appalachian Mountains especially there are small deposits of kaolin, manganese, mica, and some little iron in little pockets in the mountains. This bill permits the prospecting and mining of such deposits under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and under charges to be fixed by him. The bill has been favorably indorsed and recommended by the Department of Agriculture. It was considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture, which unanimously reported it to the full committee, and the full committee unanimously reported it favorably to the House.

I trust that the gentleman from Illinois will not object. The bill was introduced by the distinguished gentleman who is now presiding [Mr. WEBB].

Mr. MANN. There are several good things about this bill. It was introduced by one of the most distinguished and ablest and best Members of this House——

Mr. LEVER. All of which I agree to——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WEBB. It was reported by that amiable and most delightful gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. CANDLER, and is now supported by as able a chairman of the Committee on Agriculture as we ever had—the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. LEVER. But those are about the only things about the bill that commend it.

Mr. LEVER. Is not that sufficient?

Mr. MANN. Not quite.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] if the present law does not permit private parties to open up and prospect in these reservations in the West?

Mr. LEVER. My information is that, affecting other forests than these, the law does not permit prospecting and mining in the national forests; but for some reason or other that proposition was not taken care of in the Weeks law, and therefore this recommendation was made by the Department of Agriculture. I am frank to say to my friend from Texas that I am not very familiar with the mining laws.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it is a fact as it applies to the West.

Mr. MANN. That is a fact applying where there are some mines and some occasion for prospecting. It is a good thing so far as the forests are concerned, and the good comes out that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is it not done by regulation rather than by law in the West?

Mr. MANN. I understand so; but the law does not permit it down there. If there were any minerals down there, I would not object to the bill. There might be some little pockets. But this would permit anybody to go through any of these two Appalachian forests practically at will, claiming that he was a mining prospector. The greatest difficulty we have had down there is to preserve the forests from fire. I do not think that the good that will come out of it would probably equal the evil that will come out of it. If the department in charge of these forests finds—as its officials make these investigations as they go ahead—that there are really minerals down there of any value of quantity, I will not object at all to people having the right to go down there and take those minerals out.

Mr. COADY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that my chief interest in the bill is this: All through the western mountains of North Carolina the Forestry Bureau bought or condemned a great many acres of land on which there is what we call mica. There are very few parts of the country where it is produced; some in the West, and some in New Hampshire, and largely in Mitchell, Madison, and Yancey Counties in North Carolina. The farming in some places down there is not good, and the lumbering is almost exhausted in many respects, except by the big companies, and people all through that country have been making a small living by mining mica on a small scale. They will buy a little machine and go into the mountains and dig a hole about as big as a hogshead, and get out little pieces of mica and punch it into pieces as big as a dollar or a half dollar and sell it, and make a living. This can all be done without the slightest injury to the forest reserve, and of course would be done under strict regulations by the department. It would give a good many of these poor people, who are my valued constituents, a means of making a living, and just at this time mica brings a fine price. The importation of it from India has almost ceased. All the other forest reservations have a law that covers the right to lease and mine on a much larger scale than this would call for. The Department of Agriculture first thought, as I understand, that the general law would cover the right to lease in these cases. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture says that is so, but their attorney, on investigating it, said that the Weeks law was passed subsequently to the general mining law, and therefore he did not think the general mining law covered the White Mountains and the Appalachain forests.

In addition to mica, I will say to my friend from Illinois, that there are pockets of kaolin. It is a very white earth——

Mr. MANN. Clay——

Mr. WEBB. Yes, a clay; and you find that in pockets, too. I hope the gentleman will allow this bill to go through for the purpose of giving those people in that country who have in many cases very little other means of livelihood an opportunity to make a little money out of these mining operations. One man will take his family out and find a little pocket of mica, and after he pays the Government a royalty he can make a living out of it.

Mr. MANN. No. He could go to work; actual, real work. It would be a good thing for him.

Mr. WEBB. He farms a little and has a little cabin home, and makes a poor living, and this bill will help him greatly.

Mr. MANN. If he would not farm a little but farm a great deal he would make a much better living.

Mr. WEBB. No; he can not farm a great deal. If the gentleman knew this mountain section, he would not make that statement. I feel that this reserve ought to be put on a parity with all the rest of the reserves in the United States. Why should we refuse this right with reference to the Appalachian and White Mountain Reserves and permit it with reference to all other reserves?

Mr. MANN. That is the only excuse to be offered for it, and it is not a very good one.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman desires this reservation put on a parity with others. I know of forest reserves in western Washington which contain enormous deposits of tin, manganese, and other minerals. While they have been prospected, they are not permitted to be mined, under rules and regulations.

Mr. WEBB. That is in the discretion of the department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why should the Appalachians have the benefit of mining a little mica or other small mineral deposits and the great mineral tracts of the West lie undeveloped?

Mr. WEBB. I suppose that the mining of a great mineral tract would probably mar the forest; and under this law the Secretary of Agriculture would not permit anything that would lessen the value of the forest or impair the stream flow below. The reason I advocate this is because a little mine would not make a hole much bigger than two big barrels, and it could not possibly deface or impair the Appalachian region, and would be a great blessing to my people.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am in favor of the gentleman's bill and hope that it will pass by all means; but I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there are 32,000,000 acres of Indian reservations in the West which are in exactly the same condition as this Appalachian Reserve with reference to mining, and in my judgment there is no reason or right why these Indian lands should not be thrown open to prospectors, so that the Indians may have employment at home, and so that the minerals on these reservations may be developed.

Mr. WEBB. There can not be any large mining in this region; and it is for the benefit of these poor people down there that I would like to see this bill pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects. The bill goes over.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES BUILDING.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5839) to repeal paragraph 4 of section 21 of the public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913, providing for the construction of a national archives building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 4 of section 21 of the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, which reads as follows: "That before the said designs and estimates are completed inspection shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury of the best modern national archive buildings in Europe, and consultation shall be had with the best authorities in Europe on the construction and arrangement of archive buildings," be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the acquisition of a site for a national archives building, and the construction of the said building according to the terms of said act of March 4, 1913, is hereby authorized without such inspection and consultation in Europe.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PARK. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, MAINE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15807) to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUERNSEY. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, and until otherwise provided by law, two sessions of the United States District Court for the District of Maine shall be held in each and every year in the city of Bangor, in said district, beginning, respectively, on the first Tuesday of June and the first Tuesday of December, and two sessions of said court shall be held in each and every year in the city of Portland, in said district, beginning, respectively, on the first Tuesday of April and the third Tuesday of September. SEC. 2. The clerk of said district court for said district of Maine and the marshal of said district shall each at all times maintain by himself or by deputy an office in charge of himself or deputy, both at said city of Bangor and at said city of Portland. SEC. 6. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. GUERNSEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RETIRED FEDERAL JUDGES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6450) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, I should like to get some information from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] about this bill. Do Federal judges, as a rule, in the district and circuit courts avail themselves much of the opportunity to retire at the age of 70 years, after they have been on the bench 10 years?

Mr. WEBB. I think there are something like 20 or 30 Federal judges now in active service who are beyond the age of 70 and who might retire if they chose to do so.

Mr. COX. How many are there on the retired list whose salaries are going on?

Mr. WEBB. I could not answer offhand.

Mr. COX. Could the gentleman approximate it, without being bound by his answer?

Mr. WEBB. I should think there are about as many who have retired as there are who are serving overtime.

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman to say that there are between 20 and 30 who are beyond the age limit who could retire if they chose to do so.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. COX. The purpose of this bill is not to compel a judge to resign, but to let him retire, so as to give the Government an opportunity to avail itself of his services later if it wishes to do so.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; that is stating the case practically; and, further, not to induce him to retire, but if he does retire, to permit him to do work if he wishes to do so, as long as he draws the salary of the Government. He is subject to be ordered around by the senior circuit judge, with his consent, of course.

Mr. COX. Under the law as it exists to-day, he must resign if he leaves the bench?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; he retires, and that is the end of his judicial functions. I have in mind a shining example where a man could do some good work for his country, and that is Judge Gray, still capable, but of course he could not work continuously like a young man. But if this law had been passed when he retired Judge Gray could have been assigned to some big cases and he would have been glad to do it because they are drawing the full salary.

Mr. COX. I have been very much interested in this question of retirement, but has the gentleman looked into this question, whether the men who have retired have retired because of actual physical disability or because they were unwilling to work?

Mr. WEBB. I think both causes impelled some of the retirements. Some judges are unable to work, some will not work and have not worked and will not retire, and are simply blocking up the judicial procedure. I know one man who has not been on the bench for four years, and the last time he was there he went in a wheel chair; he will not resign, he can not work, and there you are.

Mr. COX. Was there not a case of a judge in West Virginia who retired and was afterwards elected a United States Senator?

Mr. WEBB. I think so.

Mr. COX. I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman's bill, and I think it might be well applied to the retired list of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. WEBB. I think it will stave off to some extent the demand for new judges.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman has served his country well in reporting this bill. We retire Army officers at the age of 64. Gen. von Hindenburg is in his seventy-ninth year, Gen. von Kluck is 73, Gen. Joffre is 75, showing that these men are still active in life, and yet we compel officers in the Army to resign in this country at the age of 64.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; and many of them are just as capable of doing good work as they ever were.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman's bill is a good one and it ought to apply to the Army and Navy along the same lines.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 260 of the Judicial Code be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 260. That when any judge of any court of the United States, appointed to hold his office during good behavior, resigns his office after having held a commission or commissions as judge of any such court or courts at least 10 years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the salary which is payable at the time of his resignation for the office that he held at the time of his resignation. But instead of resigning, any judge other than a justice of the Supreme Court, who is qualified to resign under the foregoing provisions, may retire upon full salary from regular active service on the bench, and the President shall thereupon be authorized to appoint a successor; but a judge so retiring may nevertheless be called upon by the senior circuit judge of that circuit and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties in such circuit as such retired judge may be willing to undertake, or he may be called upon by the Chief Justice and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties in any other circuit as such retired judge may be willing to undertake."

Page 2, strike out lines 16 to 20, inclusive.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 6, by inserting, after the word "may," "by statement addressed to the Attorney General."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, by inserting, after the word "may," in line 6, "by statement addressed to the Attorney General."

Mr. WEBB. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is an anomalous bill, but it may adopt a very good policy. The Constitution provides that a Federal judge is appointed for life. Under existing law we provide that he may resign and still draw his salary for the rest of his life, although, of course, after he resigns he is not a Federal judge. This provides that at the age of service when he might resign he may retire. Of course the use of the word "retire" there is anomalous. He still remains a Federal judge. He does not in fact retire. Practically all that the bill does, with the amendment which I have offered, is to give him authority to make a statement that he desires to retire, and thereupon the President can name another judge in that district or circuit. Of course we can not require these judges to do any work. Some of them do not do much when they reach that age, although they do not resign. Under this bill, although it provides for retirement, the judge does not actually retire, except from active work; he may still be called upon to do such work as he is willing to do.

Mr. COX. Under the old law?

Mr. MANN. No; under the old law he resigns and can not do any work. Strangely enough, the author of the bill in introducing it provided that it should apply to judges who have already resigned—a manifest impossibility.

Mr. WEBB. We struck that out.

Mr. MANN. You could not call upon a man who is no longer a Federal judge to perform the functions of a judge, because he has resigned and is no longer a judge.

This bill may solve the difficulty which has occurred and exists throughout the country. It may be that some of these judges may still desire to retain the functions of a judge, and if they wish to exercise them will accept this provision and make a statement that they wish to retire and then do work that they are willing to do.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Under the gentleman's interpretation of the bill, what effect will it have on superannuated judges upon the theory that they have the power to appoint clerks and some other officials?

Mr. MANN. They would not have that power, I take it, under the terms of this bill, although I am not sure what power would exist. We say in the bill that the judge so retiring may be called upon by the senior circuit judge to perform certain functions. I take it as a matter of fact that the man who is retired may have the right to perform his functions as a judge although he may not be called upon to do it, and probably as a matter of practice he would not attempt to exercise any functions unless it was agreeable.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has in mind the fact that district court judges have the power to appoint clerks as have the circuit judges, and also referees in bankruptcy? This bill seems to make it optional with these judges as to whether they will perform any judicial functions. In other words, it says they may.

Mr. MANN. I think the court appoints those officers, not the judge.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I was just about to make this suggestion. Will the judge not be the court when he chooses to be? In other words, will this not make it optional with the judge as to whether he would do any work or not and yet reserve to him his functions as the appointive power? That is a thing that seems to me should have some consideration.

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I can not answer the question; but I assume that where this bill operates the judge who is actually holding the court will enter the orders for the court. However, I hope we may soon pass a bill which has been floating around here for some time, and which, I regret to say, has not been reported by the distinguished Committee on the Judiciary in this Congress, to have the district clerks appointed on salaries and take them out of the power of the judges and away from the fee system.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that in the district in which I live we have two judges having concurrent powers. We were treated to the spectacle in that district of one of those judges getting up on the bench as the court and nominating a referee in bankruptcy. He got down and the other judge got up and he nominated another man as referee in bankruptcy and removed the first appointee, and so they had it back and forth, and the circuit court of appeals finally got hold of the case. It seems to me that we ought not to make a thing of that kind possible.

Mr. MANN. We have three district judges in the city of Chicago, in the northern district of Illinois, and they have a number in New York. That situation exists in several districts.

Mr. WEBB. There are four in the southern district of New York.

Mr. MANN. And there is no way on earth of making a man always act with any common sense.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FLANDREAU, S. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14944) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer on certain conditions the south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 47, Moody County, S. Dak., to the city of Flandreau, to be used as a public park or playground.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS., POST OFFICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 203) authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Southbridge, Mass., with a special canceling die for the Southbridge one hundredth anniversary celebration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This House joint resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the town of Southbridge, Mass., is making extensive preparations to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its incorporation; and

Whereas the projected celebration in said town will include industrial and other exhibitions, pageants, athletic games, tournaments, parades, speech making, and many other interesting features that will attract visitors from all parts; and

Whereas the citizens' committee of one hundred having the celebration in charge have widely advertised the approaching events, with the result that a great increase of incoming and outgoing mail matter is now being handled at the Southbridge post office; and

Whereas the importance of the town of Southbridge, Mass., and the extensive preparations being made by its citizens for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of its incorporation give to said celebration a national character and significance due to the fact that the town was the birthplace of the Hon. William L. Marcy, formerly Member of the United States Senate; governor of the State of New York from 1833 to 1839; Secretary of War from March 5, 1845, to March 3, 1849; and Secretary of State from March 7, 1853, to March 4, 1857; and in view of the fact that the town was also the birthplace of Hon. George T. Angell, founder and for many years president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and of many other distinguished men and women: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to prepare and deliver to the postmaster of Southbridge, Mass., a special canceling die to be used in the cancellation of mail matter in the post office of that town from May 1, 1916, to July 5, 1916, said die to be of such design as may be agreed upon by the Postmaster General and the Southbridge Citizens' Committee of One Hundred.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DALLINGER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ANNUAL TERM OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15158) to amend the Judicial Code; to fix the time when the annual term of the Supreme Court shall commence; and further to define the jurisdiction of that court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 230 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, known as the Judicial Code, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 230. The Supreme Court shall hold at the seat of government one term annually, commencing on the first Monday in October, and such adjourned or special terms as it may find necessary for the dispatch of business."

SEC. 2. That section 237 of the Judicial Code, as amended by "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911," approved December 23, 1914, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 237. A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States. The Supreme Court may reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such State court, and may, at their discretion, award execution or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ."

"It shall be competent for the Supreme Court, by certiorari or otherwise, to require that there be certified to it for review and determination with the same power and authority and with like effect as if brought up by writ of error any cause wherein a final judgment or decree has been rendered or passed by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of or an authority exercised under any State on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States and the decision is against their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution or any treaty or statute of or commission held or authority exercised under the United States and the decision is either in favor of or against the title, right, privilege, or immunity especially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority."

SEC. 3. That section 4 of "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911," approved January 28, 1915, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That judgments and decrees of the circuit court of appeals in all proceedings and causes arising under 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July 1, 1898, and in all controversies arising in such proceedings and causes; also in all causes arising under 'An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases,' approved April 22, 1908; also in all causes arising under 'An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon,' approved March 4, 1907; also in all causes arising under 'An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes,' approved March 2, 1893; also in all causes arising under 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887; and also in all causes arising under any amendment or supplement to any one of the aforementioned acts which has been heretofore or may hereafter be enacted shall be final, save only that it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari, upon the petition of any party thereto, that the proceeding, case, or controversy be certified to it for review and determination with the same power and authority and with like effect as if taken to that court by appeal or writ of error."

SEC. 4. That chapter 76, volume 35, United States Statutes at Large, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That from a final decision by a court of the United States in a proceeding in habeas corpus no appeal to the Supreme Court shall be allowed unless the court by which such final decision was rendered, or a justice of the Supreme Court, shall be of opinion that there exists probable cause for an appeal, in which event, on allowing same, the said court or justice shall certify that there is probable cause for such allowance."

SEC. 5. That no court having power to review a judgment or decree rendered or passed by another shall dismiss a writ of error solely because an appeal should have been taken, or dismiss an appeal solely because a writ of error should have been sued out, but when such mistake or error occurs it shall disregard the same and take action which would be appropriate if the proper appellate procedure had been followed.

SEC. 6. That no judgment or decree rendered or passed by the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands more than 60 days after the approval of this act shall be reviewed by the Supreme Court upon writ of error or appeal; but it shall be competent for the Supreme Court, by certiorari or otherwise, to require that there be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority and with like effect as if brought up by writ of error or appeal, any cause wherein after such 60 days the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands may render or pass a judgment or decree which would be subject to review under existing laws.

SEC. 7. That no writ of error, appeal, or writ of certiorari intended to bring up any cause for review by the Supreme Court shall be allowed or entertained unless duly applied for within six months after entry of the judgment or decree complained of: Provided, That writs of certiorari addressed to the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands may be granted if application therefor be made within 12 months.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect 30 days after its approval; but it shall not apply to nor effect any writ of error, appeal, or writ of certiorari theretofore duly applied for. The right of review under existing laws, in respect of judgments and decrees entered before this act takes effect, shall remain unaffected for the period of six months thereafter, but at the end of that time such right shall cease.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 8, after the word "error," insert:

"This section shall not be construed as conferring jurisdiction upon the circuit court of appeals in any proceeding, cause, or controversy in which jurisdiction has not been given to it by other statutory provisions. visions."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced that amendment at the request of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That commission is anxious that none of the present rights of the Interstate Commerce Commission will be taken away from it, and at the suggestion of Mr. Commissioner Meyer I have offered the amendment. I see no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one question. This bill changes the date of the commencement of the term of the court from the second Monday in October to the first Monday. As that is a matter largely of the convenience of the members of the Supreme Court, may I ask the gentleman if he understands that that change is entirely satisfactory to them?

Mr. WEBB. It is. It is at their request. They want a little shorter vacation and more time to do work when the weather is better.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that on line 24, page 6, the word "effect" is used instead of apparently the word "affect." Should that word be changed?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that the word "affect" be substituted for the word "effect."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. On page 4, at the end of line 10, the word "railroad" in the singular is used. It occurs to the Chair that possibly that should be in the plural.

Mr. WEBB. No; I think that is the title of the act which we quoted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SUITS AGAINST REVENUE OFFICERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14299) to amend section 33 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 33 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 33. That when any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any court of a State against any officer appointed under or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States now or hereafter enacted, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer, on account of any act done under color of his office or of any such law, or on account of any right, title, or authority claimed by such officer or other person under any such law, or is commenced against any person holding property or estate by title derived from any such officer and affects the validity of any such revenue law, or against any officer of the courts of the United States for or on account of any act done under color of his office or in the performance of his duties as such officer, or when any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced against any person for or on account of anything done by him while an officer of either House of Congress in the discharge of his official duty in executing any order of such House, the said suit or prosecution may at any time before the trial or final hearing thereof be removed for trial into the district court next to be holden in the district where the same is pending upon the petition of such defendant to said district court and in the following manner: Said petition shall set forth the nature of the suit or prosecution and be verified by affidavit and, together with a certificate signed by an attorney or counselor at law of some court of record of the State where such suit or prosecution is commenced or of the United States stating that, as counsel for the petitioner, he has examined the proceedings against him and carefully inquired into all the matters set forth in the petition, and that he believes them to be true, shall be presented to the said district court, if in session, or if it be not, to the clerk thereof at his office, and shall be filed in said office. The cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of the district court and shall proceed as a cause originally commenced in that court; but all bail and other security given upon such suit or prosecution shall continue in like force and effect as if the same had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the State court. When the suit is commenced in the State court by summons, subpœna, petition, or any other process except capias, the clerk of the district court shall issue a writ of certiorari to the State court requiring it to send to the district court the record and the proceedings in the cause. When it is commenced by capias, or by any other similar form of proceeding by which a personal arrest is ordered, he shall issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, a duplicate of which shall be delivered to the clerk of the State court or left at his office by the marshal of the district or his deputy or by some other person duly authorized thereto; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the State court to stay all further proceedings in the cause, and the suit or prosecution, upon delivery of such process, or leaving the same as aforesaid, shall be held to be removed to the district court, and any further proceedings, trial, or judgment therein in the State court shall be void. If the defendant in the suit or prosecution be in actual custody on mesne process therein, it shall be the duty of the marshal, by virtue of the writ of habeas corpus cum causa, to take the body of the defendant into his custody, to be dealt with in the cause according to law and the order of the district court, or in vacation, of any judge thereof; and if, upon the removal of such suit or prosecution it is made to appear to the district court that no copy of the record and proceedings therein in the State court can be obtained, the district court may allow and require the plaintiff to proceed de novo and to file a declaration of his cause of action, and the parties may thereupon proceed as in actions originally brought in said district court. On failure of the plaintiff so to proceed, judgment of non prosequitur may be rendered against him, with costs for the defendant."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INSURANCE COMPANIES AND FRATERNAL BENEFICIAL SOCIETIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12541) authorizing insurance companies and fraternal beneficiary societies to file bills of interpleader.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say to the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that I am very much in favor of this bill. I think it is very necessary in order that justice may be done to insurance companies having funds, and rival claimants in various States are claiming those funds, but I notice that the Committee on the Judiciary recommended an amendment increasing the limit of jurisdiction from $500 to $2,000.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend that if he will let us consider the bill he will have a chance to knock out the amendment and let it remain at $500, as it was originally drawn.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman thinks that practically nullifies the benefits of the bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I undoubtedly think it would nullify the benefits of the bill if the limitation is raised.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Personally I am opposed to the change, or opposed to the bill, unless the amendment goes in, because I do not believe we ought to let down the bars by extending the jurisdiction in the fashion intended by this bill to these small claims contemplated under the bill as it was introduced.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, let me say to my friend, of course as yet we have not consent to consider the bill, but after we get consent to consider it the gentleman can make his statement, and I will be very glad if he will do so, but I hope the gentleman will not object to allow us to consider this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district courts of the United States shall have original cognizance to entertain suits in equity begun by bills of interpleader where the same are filed by any insurance company or fraternal beneficiary society, duly verified, and where it is made to appear by such bill that one or more persons, being claimants against such company or society, reside within the jurisdiction of said court; that such company or society has made or issued some policy of insurance or certificate of membership providing for the payment of a sum of money of at least $500 as insurance or benefits to a beneficiary or beneficiaries or to the heirs, next of kin, or legal representative of the person insured or member; that two or more adverse claimants, citizens of different States are claiming or may claim to be entitled to such insurance or benefits and that such company or society offers to deposit the amount of such insurance or benefits with the clerk of said court and to abide the judgment of said court. In all such cases the court shall have the power to issue its process for said claimants, returnable at such time as the said court or a judge thereof shall determine, which shall be addressed to and served by the United States marshals for the respective districts wherein said claimants reside or may be found; to hear said bill of interpleader and decide thereon according to the practice in equity; to discharge said complainant from further liability upon the payment of said insurance or benefit as directed by the court, less complainant's actual court costs; and shall have the power to make such orders and decrees as may be suitable and proper and to issue the necessary writs usual and customary in such cases for the purpose of carrying out such orders and decrees: Provided, That in all cases where a beneficiary or beneficiaries are named in the policy of insurance or certificate of membership or where the same has been assigned and written notice thereof shall have been given to the insurance company or fraternal benefit society, the bill of interpleader shall be filed in the district where either the beneficiary or beneficiaries or the assignee or assignees or any of them may reside.

Page 2, line 1, strike out "$500" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I believe I introduced the first bill on this subject some Congresses ago. It has been improved through the committee. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who introduced the former bill, and I think the committee improved that and possibly it was reintroduced at their request, and it is proposed to give the fraternal insurance companies, where there are several claimants for money that is to be paid on account of the death of one of the members, the right to pay the money into court and file a bill of interpleader.

The original bill provided that they might do this when there was $500 involved. The committee have offered an amendment, which is pending, to strike out $500 and make it $2,000. I have no interest in fraternal insurance companies myself, or any other kind, personally. My firm used to be the lawyers for a number of the largest fraternal insurance companies in the United States, and I have a letter from an old partner of mine, one of the brightest men I ever saw, and is now. I wrote him about this. He is the president at the present time of the National Fraternal Congress. He informed me that probably more than half of the certificates outstanding of the fraternal insurance companies are for amounts less than $2,000, and with this amendment it would not apply to these cases.

The fraternal insurance companies have always been, from a legislative point of view, more or less the pet of State legislatures, and I have no doubt if it were not for the fraternal insurance companies the old line companies would be charging much higher rates than they are now doing.

Now, I think we might probably permit them to file a bill of interpleader where the amount is $500, as was provided in the original bill, and I hope we may disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be disloyal to my splendid committee and, of course, I am not, because I voted in committee to keep the $500 limitation in the bill and, of course, I reserved the right to object to the $2,000 limitation when it should come to the House. My idea has been all along that one object of the bill is to help the little companies, and not the big ones alone; that the little insurance companies all over the United States should be benefited by this protection given by the bill, and as far as I am personally concerned I am perfectly willing for the $500 limitation to remain in the bill as it was originally.

Since we have changed the $500 limitation to $2,000 I have received a great many letters from the fraternal organizations all over the United States. One of those I have received is from the National Legislative and Information Bureau, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. That letter is as follows:

NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE AND INFORMATION BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1916.

Hon. EDWIN Y. WEBB,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, City.

DEAR SIR: Under date of March 20, 1916, we addressed a communication to you favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 12541) to authorize insurance companies and fraternal benefit societies to file bills of interpleader in the courts of the United States in proper cases, and have noted with pleasure that the committee has favorably reported the measure to the House.

We regret, however, that the committee has seen fit to amend the bill by increasing the amount that must be involved from $500 to $2,000.

The bill without this amendment admirably met the situation of the organizations which we represent, and the report accompanying the bill does not explain why this change was made. It will operate to discriminate against the fraternal associations, as it would retain the benefits of the law for most of the policies issued by the old-line insurance companies and at the same time deprive most of the policies of the fraternal insurance associations, which are usually less than $2,000, of the benefits of the law.

For instance, only about 40 per cent of the insurance policies issued by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen are for $2,000, and about 50 per cent are issued for $1,500, 5 per cent for $1,000, and 5 per cent for $500. A similar situation exists with reference to the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and in a somewhat less degree with respect to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Order of Railway Conductors.

We respectfully protest against the change in the bill, and beg to request that the original amount of $500 be restored, so that the organizations which we represent may be accorded equal benefits under the law. The cases in which the brotherhoods would require the use of this statute are comparatively infrequent, and they would not, by reason of the lessening of the amount, burden the courts or overwhelm them with minor questions; but when resort must be had to the statute the need is equally great when $500 is involved as when $2,000 is the amount.

Hoping that the committee may find it desirable to reconsider its action in recommending the change in the bill, and that H. R. 12541 as originally introduced may be enacted into law, we beg to remain,

Yours, respectfully,

H. E. WILLS,
A. G. C. E. and National Legislative Representative, B. of L. E.
P. J. MCNAMARA,
Vice President, National Legislative Representative, B. of L. F. & E.
W. M. CLARK,
Vice President, National Legislative Representative, O. R. C.
VAL FITZPATRICK,
Vice President, National Legislative Representative, B. of R. T.

It strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that there is no reason why we should not give the little company that insures for $500 or $1,000 the same right to protect itself against a double suit as to give the old line, well-established companies that right.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman think the comparative infrequency of cases of this character arising would make it no more burdensome to the courts of the United States?

Mr. WEBB. I do. I do not think there have been over 25 or 30 of this kind of cases, but if such cases occur if we give the big insurance company the right to defend itself in the Federal court to determine who is entitled to the money, we certainly should give the small insurance company the same right. That is the way I feel about it. I do not think we ought to make a distinction, therefore I am willing to vote against the committee amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Personally I do not favor this bill. It adopts a policy we have sought to avoid in the years past. Unless the Government is a party we have never in any instance, so far as I am aware, permitted the Federal courts to extend their jurisdiction beyond the State or a hundred miles beyond the place where the court is held. That is the policy we have uniformly pursued ever since the beginning of our Government. This changes that policy and permits jurisdiction to be taken no matter where the persons may be located. Suppose here is a person with a small claim of $500 and there is another claimant to that money possibly a thousand or two thousand miles away. If this bill becomes a law, the district court can take jurisdiction of them. It seems to me this should not be permitted.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In just a minute. I think this would make justice so expensive as to be equivalent to a denial of justice, especially if the claim is small. Now I yield.

Mr. COX. Is not that the law now in most of the States?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; that is not the law as to personal claims. It is true, of course, that so far as real estate is concerned you can bring your suit in the jurisdiction where the property is situated and bar any outside claimant, no matter where he may be situated, but that does not give a personal judgment against an individual, which is necessary in cases covered by this bill.

The appeal is made on behalf of the small insurance companies. There is another side, the small claimant, who perhaps for years has contributed to a policy of insurance. Should we say to him that he ought to protect himself as best he can, or should we say to the insurance company, "You are in much better position to bear the loss, if there is to be a loss, than the small claimant"? Personally I felt that it would be better to change the bill and provide that in case the claim is large enough, say $2,000, so that a man can afford to spend the money litigating, the jurisdiction might be extended. Still I do not like the bill. I am afraid it sets a bad precedent. If the House desires to pass this bill, however, and leave the amount $500, I am not going to object. I am going to let the Members say whether they prefer to support the little insurance company or stand by the little claimant and let him litigate his claim at home.

We rebelled against England because she compelled us to go beyond the seas to try our cases, where we could not go without great loss. Why should we now change our policy and insist that a man has no right to try his case at home, no matter how poor or otherwise unable he may be to prosecute his claim at a great distance away from home?

Let me suggest another reason against this bill. I believe this is true, that the insurance companies can protect themselves by proper contracts so that they need not suffer at all. I think they have it within their power to do so, while the man who has taken out an insurance policy is not able to do it at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What would the gentleman say in a case of this kind? Take the case of a small insurance company, where there was a small policy and death occurred and the company was anxious and willing to pay the proper beneficiaries. Suit was brought in one court in Newport, Ky., and one in Cincinnati, Ohio, on the same claim, and judgment was recovered in both of those courts, and it was necessary for this company to pay both judgments. There was absolutely no opportunity for the company to take the matter into one court and have it settled as between the two claimants.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That may happen to any citizen who has a contested personal claim. Why should an insurance company be given special privileges; and are not the insurance companies collecting from you and me for the purpose of paying this class of losses? It is an infinitesimally small amount so far as the policyholders are concerned, but if you defeat an honest policyholder by forcing suit in a jurisdiction where he can not support his claim you have done a serious injustice.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But certainly the gentleman in a case of that sort would not contend that Congress ought not to enact a law which would permit the company to go into court and have the court adjudicate the rightful party to whom the money should be paid.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In a few cases injustice has been done, but why make a law that only applies to insurance companies? They are no more entitled to relief than other people suffering in the same way because they can not now secure jurisdiction of all the necessary parties to a controversy. In those cases where parties live far apart it seems to me a greater injustice would be done by granting than by denying jurisdiction. I have no objection to insurance companies. I carry more or less insurance myself, and I have no ill will toward them, but it does seem to me we ought to protect the people at home.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But if this limitation of $2,000 is adopted it would simply amount to the fact that Congress would be protecting the big insurance companies and affording no protection whatever to those insurance companies which insure in very small amounts on weekly payments, for instance.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The reason why I insist on the amendment making the jurisdictional amount $2,000 is that if a person has a claim of $2,000 he can better afford to litigate than if the claim is only $500. I do not believe in the bill at all, but I would rather have it applied only to the larger claims as a lesser evil.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word about this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. IGOE. I was a member of the subcommittee that considered it and assisted in drawing up some of the amendments to the bill that was afterwards reintroduced.

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] makes a mistake when he says that this bill is exclusively for the benefit of the insurance companies. The fact of the matter is this, that the insurance company holds a fund, a sum of money, which it is willing to pay. There are several claimants for that fund, who may be in different States. Now, I submit that it is just as much to the interest of those claimants to have the whole matter thrashed out in one jurisdiction as it is to the insurance company to pay the money into court and be rid of the controversy.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does the gentleman contend that the insured can be benefited by this bill?

Mr. IGOE. Of course he can.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. How can he?

Mr. IGOE. Because he will wait in some cases for years and will have to come back into a lawsuit in one case, while the insurance company may be trying a lawsuit on account of the same money in another case. It seems to me that it is just as fair to protect the insurance company against the double payment in these cases as it is to protect the interests of the policyholders.

Now, then, who causes the trouble? The insurance companies do not cause the trouble. They issue a policy of insurance, and either the insured or his heirs cause the trouble. The insurance companies have nothing whatever to do with it. They are anxious to pay the money, and if trouble is caused by anybody it is by the insured or his heirs or assignees.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGOE. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. You say that this bill does not grant special privileges to insurance companies. An individual policyholder could not go into the United States court unless he had a claim of $3,000, exclusive of costs and interest. Why do you say an insurance company could go into an United States court on a claim of $500 when the policyholder can not get into court unless he has a $3,000 claim?

Mr. IGOE. The insurance company has the money and must pay it into court.

Mr. DILLON. Then, why not allow them to use the State courts?

Mr. IGOE. They will, if they can get jurisdiction of the other party. This only applies in cases where the claimants are citizens of different States and must also be citizens of different States from the insurance company.

Mr. DILLON. But nobody else can go into the Federal court unless he has a claim of $3,000, exclusive of interest and costs. Why give an insurance company an exclusive privilege of going into court on a $500 policy claim?

Mr. IGOE. This is not an exclusive privilege. It is applying a law to cases where the insurance company wants to pay the money and can not get the parties into court in any other way.

Mr. DILLON. They can get the parties into a State court by paying the money into the court and interpleading.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Suppose there is a citizen of Illinois and a citizen of Missouri and an insurance company of New York. There is no way by which the insurance company can get those people into one court.

Mr. DILLON. The party entitled to the funds must get it out of court after the sum is paid into court.

Mr. IGOE. The insurance company must get personal service on a defendant before it can be released. I could cite 15 or 20 cases exactly like that, where the insurance companies have been sued in two States, and it has been held that judgment in one is not a bar to the other.

Mr. DILLON. Why not make this bill general as to all characters of cases? Why confine it to the insurance companies?

Mr. IGOE. We have not had that question brought up to us. We have had the cases of insurance companies that have actually arisen brought before us. We do not know of cases of any other kind where the parties have been denied justice by the absence of such a law as this.

Mr. DILLON. The gentleman believes that these laws should be general, does he not?

Mr. IGOE. I do.

Mr. DILLON. Then, why not make this a general law?

Mr. MANN. Let us pass this, and then get some others.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment raising the amount from $500 to $2,000.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of the Legislature of the State of Washington, approved March 16, 1901, ceding to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the territory embraced within the Mount Rainier National Park, are hereby accepted and sole and exclusive jurisdiction is hereby assumed by the United States over such territory, saving, however, to the said State the right to serve civil or criminal process within the limits of the aforesaid park in suits or prosecutions for or on account of rights acquired, obligations incurred, or crimes committed in said State but outside of said park, and saving further to the said State the right to tax persons and corporations, their franchises and property, on the lands included in said park. All the laws applicable to places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States shall have force and effect in said park. All fugitives from justice taking refuge in said park shall be subject to the same laws as refugees from justice found in the State of Washington.

SEC. 2. That said park shall constitute a part of the United States judicial district for the western district of Washington, and the district court of the United States in and for said district shall have jurisdiction of all offenses committed within said boundaries.

SEC. 3. That if any offense shall be committed in the Mount Rainier National Park, which offense is not prohibited or the punishment for which is not specifically provided for by any law of the United States, the offender shall be subject to the same punishment as the laws of the State of Washington in force at the time of the commission of the offense may provide for a like offense in said State; and no subsequent repeal of any such law of the State of Washington shall affect any prosecution for said offense committed within said park.

SEC. 4. That all hunting or the killing, wounding, or capturing at any time of any wild bird or animal, except dangerous animals when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human lives or inflicting personal injury, is prohibited within the limits of said park; nor shall any fish be taken out of the waters of the park in any other way than by hook and line, and then only at such seasons and in such times and manner as may be directed by the Secretary of the Interior. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the management and care of the park and for the protection of the property therein, especially for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits other than those legally located prior to the passage of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 365), natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, and for the protection of the animals and birds in the park from capture or destruction, and to prevent their being frightened or driven from the park; and he shall make rules and regulations governing the taking of fish from the streams or lakes in the park. Possession within said park of the dead bodies, or any part thereof, of any wild bird or animal shall be prima facie evidence that the person or persons having the same are guilty of violating this act. Any person or persons, or stage or express company, or railway company, who knows or has reason to believe that they were taken or killed contrary to the provisions of this act and who receives for transportation any of said animals, birds, or fish so killed, caught, or taken, or who shall violate any of the other provisions of this act or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, mineral deposits other than those legally located prior to the passage of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 365), natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, or fish in the park, or who shall within said park commit any damage, injury, or spoliation to or upon any building, fence, hedge, gate, guidepost, tree, wood, underwood, timber, garden, crops, vegetables, plants, land, springs, mineral deposits other than those legally located prior to the passage of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 365), natural curiosities, or other matter or thing growing or being thereon or situated therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings.

SEC. 5. That all guns, traps, teams, horses, or means of transportation of every nature or description used by any person or persons within said park limits when engaged in killing, trapping, ensnaring, or capturing such wild beasts, birds, or animals shall be forfeited to the United States and may be seized by the officers in said park and held pending the prosecution of any person or persons arrested under charge of violating the provisions of this act, and upon conviction under this act of such person or persons using said guns, traps, teams, horses, or other means of transportation, such forfeiture shall be adjudicated as a penalty in addition to the other punishment provided in this act. Such forfeited property shall be disposed of and accounted for by and under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 6. That the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington shall appoint a commissioner who shall reside in the park and who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any violations of law or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish, and objects of interest therein, and for other purposes authorized by this act.

Such commissioner shall have power, upon sworn information, to issue process in the name of the United States for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any misdemeanor, or charged with a violation of the rules and regulations, or with a violation of any of the provisions of this act prescribed for the government of said park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in said park, and to try the person so charged, and, if found guilty, to impose punishment and to adjudge the forfeiture prescribed.

In all cases of conviction an appeal shall lie from the judgment of said commissioner to the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, and the United States district court in said district shall prescribe the rules of procedure and practice for said commissioner in the trial of cases and for appeal to said United States district court.

SEC. 7. That any such commissioner shall also have power to issue process as hereinbefore provided for the arrest of any person charged with the commission within said boundaries of any criminal offense not covered by the provisions of section 4 of this act to hear the evidence introduced, and if he is of opinion that probable cause is shown for holding the person so charged for trial shall cause such person to be safely conveyed to a secure place of confinement within the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, and certify a transcript of the record of his proceedings and the testimony in the case to said court, which court shall have jurisdiction of the case: Provided, That the said commissioner shall grant bail in all cases bailable under the laws of the United States or of said State.

SEC. 8. That all process issued by the commissioner shall be directed to the marshal of the United States for the western district of Washington, but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the arrest by any officer or employee of the Government or any person employed by the United States in the policing of said reservation within said boundaries without process of any person taken in the act of violating the law or this act or the regulations prescribed by said Secretary as aforesaid.

SEC. 9. That the commissioner provided for in this act shall be paid an annual salary of $1,500, payable quarterly: Provided, That the said commissioner shall reside within the exterior boundaries of said Mount Rainier National Park, at a place to be designated by the court making such appointment: And provided further, That all fees, costs, and expenses collected by the commissioner shall be disposed of as provided in sections 11 and 12 of this act.

SEC. 10. That all fees, costs, and expenses arising in cases under this act and properly chargeable to the United States shall be certified, approved, and paid as are like fees, costs, and expenses in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 11. That all fines and costs imposed and collected shall be deposited by said commissioner of the United States, or the marshal of the United States collecting the same, with the clerk of the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior shall notify, in writing, the governor of the State of Washington of the passage and approval of this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 8, line 2, strike out the words "and twelve," and strike out the word "sections" and insert the word "section."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. So that it will read, "as provided in section 11 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I am interested in knowing whether the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] is in favor of this legislation. It seems that this territory is now under the jurisdiction of the State of Washington. During the past several months we have heard a great many protests against the Federal Government taking charge of territory in the State of Washington. Now it appears that the State of Washington desires that in this case the Government shall take jurisdiction of this vast territory in that State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. To permit legal jurisdiction.

Mr. NORTON. I wonder why? It is not, of course, because the Federal Government is expected to appropriate large sums of money to take care of this park and to provide men out there to care for it, and to prosecute and punish those who may commit crimes in the park territory, all at the expense of the United States? I shall be glad to hear from the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will not take the time of the House to-day to discuss that; but this tract was long ago accepted as a national park, and is not likely ever to produce revenue for the State in the form of taxes. It is different entirely from reservations which are simply withheld from taxation and from development. This bill gives a commissioner legal jurisdiction of the park.

Mr. NORTON. Does not the gentleman think the State of Washington ought to provide the revenues to take care of this park, all the land in which is now owned by the State?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The county in which it partly lies has spent half a million dollars to build and pave an automobile road 50 miles long that the public might reach this national park. The visitors to this park approach in number those who visit the Yellowstone Park, which is probably the best advertised of all the national parks.

Mr. NORTON. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks that the gentleman has made in the Congress during the past several months, and have been almost convinced that it was not just right for the Government to take jurisdiction over land out in the State of Washington, but now when I observe the attitude of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] toward this proposed legislation I am in a quandary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I may say to the gentleman that we have two more large beauty tracts in the State of Washington which we are going to try to force onto the Government as national parks.

Mr. NORTON. Then the gentleman now concedes that his heretofore often announced opposition to Federal control of large tracts of land in the State of Washington is not so real as at other times he would have had us believe?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There will still be a great deal of land left in forest reserves that we hope to see developed and made subject to taxation or a proper equivalent given to us in lieu of taxes.

Mr. MONDELL. We are to understand, then, that the gentleman from Washington is willing to accept Federal jurisdiction coupled with goodly appropriations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For a great national park.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. Of course, I know that the gentleman from Washington is not entirely responsible for all of the language in this bill, which conforms to laws that we have heretofore passed concerning parks. In section 4 it is provided—

That all hunting, or the killing, wounding, or capturing at any time of any wild bird or animal, except dangerous animals when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human lives or inflicting personal injury, is prohibited within the limits of said park.

I will state, by the way, that there is a rumor that the next President of the United States has just been nominated at Chicago, in the person of Mr. Justice Charles E. Hughes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX. Wait until you hear from the Progressive convention first before you prophesy whether the Republican nominee will be successful.

Mr. MONDELL. As the gentleman from Illinois has just stated, the next President of the United States has just been nominated.

Mr. MURRAY. Oh, the convention which will nominate him does not meet until next week. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. About which proposition?

Mr. WINGO. The proposition which the gentleman was discussing—wild animals.

Mr. MANN. Before I yield I would like to ask a question. Under that act would it be possible for anybody to kill a coyote or a rat or any other noxious animal not engaged in trying to destroy human lives or to inflict personal injury? Now, I yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. I am somewhat a student of psychology, and I noticed that while the gentleman was discussing the provision relating to the killing of wild animals running at large, that it occurred to him to call attention to the nominee of the Republican Party. I wondered if there was any psychological connection between the wild animal known as the bull moose and the announcement that the gentleman made. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The psychological connection was this: I was talking about legislation which prohibited the killing of wild animals and other noxious beasts, such as Democrats, and made the announcement that the nomination had just been made by the Republican convention in Chicago.

Mr. WINGO. Evidently the gentleman has changed his viewpoint and is now opposed to the killing of such animals as the bull moose.

Mr. MANN. Here is the bill that prohibits it. Is the gentleman going to vote for it? I will say to the gentleman that I have no compunctions about it—the bull moose has been dead four years, but everybody has not discovered it. The only hope that you Democrats have, the only chance on earth that you have, is that you may breathe the breath of life into the defunct bull moose. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WINGO. The question is whether it was suicide or murder. I am inclined to think it was suicide.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can hold a post-mortem, and he may try to prove that the death did not occur at all. However, I do not wish to discuss that matter further, for I want to get through some time this afternoon.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Perhaps the gentleman would like to know that Mr. Roosevelt has been nominated by the Progressives.

Mr. MANN. We are quite willing.

Mr. WINGO. That shows that the bull moose is not dead.

Mr. MANN. That does not prove it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the question that has been asked has been answered in many ways.

Mr. MANN. No; it has not. Some years ago some bright genius connected with one of the departments drew the original bill providing for the exercise of jurisdiction by the Government of the United States for the punishment of offenses committed in national parks, and he went the limit. This provision is idiotic, and everybody who reads it knows it. But we have passed bill after bill of that sort. The original law on the subject provided that the commissioner might send a man to the penitentiary for several years.

Congress passed a number of bills of that kind; they passed through the hands of the Interior Department, through the hands of the Department of Justice, through the distinguished Senate of the United States, through the Committee on the Public Lands in the House of Representatives, but it occurred to me when I read the bill to read the Constitution in connection with it, and I called the attention of the House to the fact that under the Constitution a man could not be sentenced to the penitentiary without a trial.

Bills have since been remodeled, and I call the attention of the House to this because it is silly for Congress to make appropriations for killing certain wild animals in national parks and forests and then pass a bill saying that it is an offense to do it.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendments are withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15617) to establish fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the States of Alabama; Louisiana; Florida; Georgia, South Carolina, or North Carolina; Maryland or Virginia; Oregon or Washington; Texas; Oklahoma; Illinois; Washington; Arizona; New Mexico; Michigan; Idaho; Missouri; Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey; and Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

SUPPLY OF GAS IN HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15777) to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of gas in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill has defects similar to the other one.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let it take the course of the other bill and go over without prejudice.

UNIFORM STANDARDS OF COTTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15913) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish uniform standards of classification for cotton; to provide for the application, enforcement, and use of such standards in transactions in interstate and foreign commerce; to prevent deception therein; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I really think this bill ought not to be passed by unanimous consent in the absence of some Members who, I think, want to be heard on the bill.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I think there are two gentlemen he has in mind who may be interested in this proposition, and I shall not complain if it goes over. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think this bill will come up very soon on District day. I do not think it ought to be passed to-day.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 204) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE CANAL ZONE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15955) extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

INTERSTATE USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 208) to regulate the interstate use of automobiles and all self-propelled vehicles which use the public highways in interstate commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I suppose the gentleman would not object if the State of Maryland were excepted?

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK REGULATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3205) to amend "An act to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1894.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not object to this bill. This is to make a certain thing legal.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, we have enough regulations out there.

Mr. MANN. Here is the situation and all this bill does. It is in reference to the Yellowstone National Park. The law now provides for a penalty of not more than $1,000 or two years' imprisonment. This bill reduces the fine to not more than $500 and the imprisonment to six months.

Mr. FINLEY. If it is a serious offense, why does the gentleman wish to lower the punishment?

Mr. MANN. This is the difficulty. These are offenses which may be punished by a commissioner who is located in the park. Under the Constitution, while they have been exercising this power for some years during which this law has been in effect, a man to be imprisoned for two years in the penitentiary must be guilty of a criminal offense and not a misdemeanor. The Constitution provides that a man can be found guilty of criminal offense only after an indictment.

Mr. FINLEY. I am aware of that.

Mr. MANN. And this is to remove that difficulty about the law.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman wish to send people to the lockup without an indictment and without a trial?

Mr. MANN. That is just what we want to avoid, except in these minor offenses, for a short term, as in a case of the justice of the peace.

Mr. FINLEY. Like a magistrate court?

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is what it amounts to. We maintain a magistrate out there and pay him a salary.

Mr. FINLEY. Who appoints the magistrate?

Mr. MANN. The President.

Mr. FINLEY. Does he have jury trials?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. No; he does not.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes; he does.

Mr. MONDELL. He does not ordinarily.

Mr. MANN. Ordinarily there are no jury trials.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The effect of the law as it stands now is that there are practically no prosecutions, because it is necessary for the authorities there to make complaint and have every one of them brought before a court of justice hundreds of miles away, and later a trial in the United States district court, all involving very large expense. Most of the offenses are of a trifling nature, that can be and ought to be disposed of by a commissioner in a commissioner's court right in the park. The effect is, as I say, that these trifling offenses, if they were taken up, involve so much expense that the commissioner is doing practically nothing.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think a fine of $100 or 30 days' imprisonment would be sufficient to cover those minor offenses?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly that is sufficient. The only thing this bill does is to change the law by striking out $1,000 and inserting $500 and by striking out two years and inserting six months.

Mr. FINLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that he make that change, and then it will be in accord with the magistrate law throughout the country. That is the usual jurisdiction of a magistrate.

Mr. MANN. Oh, every justice of the peace sends men up for six months. They do here in the District, where we legislate.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. A reduction is made from $1,000 to $500 and from two years to six months, so as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the commissioner.

Now everything must go before the grand jury and for trial to the district court of the United States.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that, but for these minor offenses would not six months or $500 fine be sufficient?

Mr. MONDELL. This is the maximum, the gentleman understands?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It is not more than $500 or not more than six months, and in framing and reframing the criminal laws Congress has had consideration of many measures to that effect, and the maximum penalty has been fixed.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will permit one question. Is the gentleman satisfied that to give punishment of six months' maximum imprisonment or $500 maximum fine would not result in injustice and be harsh on supposed offenders for these small offenses?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Why, we think not. This bill was considered very carefully, first by the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and later by the full committee.

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following paragraph, forming part of section 4 of an act entitled "An act to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1894, to wit:

"Any person found guilty of violating any of the provisions of this act or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park, or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in the said park, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subjected to a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both, and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings," be amended to read as follows:

"Any person found guilty of violating any of the provisions of this act or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park, or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in the said park, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subjected to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. A moment ago when we were discussing the Mount Rainier Park bill attention was called to a certain provision to the effect that "all hunting, killing, wounding, or capturing at any time any bird or wild animal, except dangerous animals when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human life or inflicting personal injury," attention was called to that paragraph as being rather peculiar and extraordinary. The original bill for the protection of the national parks is the Yellowstone National Park bill. The Yellowstone National Park bill does not contain the word "personal" before the word "injury," which was contained in the bill we passed a few moments ago.

I do not understand why in drawing a new act along the lines of the Yellowstone Park act it was deemed wise to insert the word "personal," so that a wild animal could only be killed where it was dangerous or even inflicted personal injury. In the Yellowstone Park bill such animal can be killed if it is likely to inflict injury of any sort. That is certainly a better provision.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. This is the end of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

P. H. AYLETT.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we return to the Private Calendar No. 252, H. R. 14645.

Mr. MANN. What is the number?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Calendar No. 252, page 31, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raised an objection yesterday when this bill was called.

Mr. MANN. And I find I was mistaken.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And upon further examination the gentleman very candidly says he was mistaken, and I hope that the bill may now be taken up and passed.

Mr. MANN. There were two bills to which I objected, and I was wrong; that is all there is about it. My memory was wrong.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to returning to this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14645) for the relief of the legal representatives of P. H. Aylett.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representative of P. H. Aylett, deceased, the sum of $595, being the amount of Treasury draft No. 5845, issued April 18, 1861, in favor of said P. H. Aylett, United States attorney for the eastern district of Virginia, in payment of attendance, travel, and fees from January 1 to April 3, 1861, said draft having been lost and standing unpaid on the records of the Treasury Department; and a sum sufficient for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Add, at the end of the bill, page 2, line 4, after the word "appropriated," a colon and the following: "Provided, That before paying the same the said legal representative of P. H. Aylett shall deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury a good and sufficient bond, with the surety to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify the United States against all losses, costs, or damage incurred by reason of making the said payment."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JACKSON J. MASH, DECEASED.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the top of page 32, Private Calendar No. 262, to a bill which is in the same class of cases as the one just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the return requested by the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14889) for the relief of the estate of Jackson J. Mash, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Jackson J. Mash, deceased, the sum of $146.29, for services performed by the said Jackson J. Mash as postmaster at Duncanville, Ga., under commission dated June 15, 1835.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "estate" and insert the word "heirs."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the heirs of Jackson J. Mash, deceased."

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. Res. 260, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 260.

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, it shall be in order to consider the following items (the general rules of the House notwithstanding):

For the procurement of the exclusive rights of John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) to their discoveries and inventions in the art of control by radiodynamic energy of the movement of water-borne carriers of high explosives, in accordance with a proposal heretofore made by said John Hays Hammond, jr., and said company, dated March 23, 1916, and known as proposal Z, $750,000: Provided, That said sum shall not be paid unless a report of a board of three Army and three Navy officers, to be appointed by the President, shall be favorable to the acquisition of such rights, such report to be made after a demonstration of the application of the said system to the control of torpedoes; and, to provide for such demonstration, $30,000 of the sum so appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose, may be applied to the expense of conducting the same exclusive of the services of said Hammond, which services shall be rendered free of charge, the amount so applied and which shall be immediately available, in the event of the purchase of such rights, to be considered as part payment of the purchase price of the same.

The Commissioner of Patents is authorized and directed, in the event of the entrance by the Government into a contract with the abovementioned parties for the purchase of such rights, in all instances where it would grant patents to John Hays Hammond, jr., or to the Radio Engineering Co., upon request of the United States to issue said patents to the United States, and in the event of said contract being made the Commissioner of Patents is further authorized and directed to keep applications for such patents in the secret archives of the Patent Office, not open to disclosure even in cases of interferences.

For procurement and installation of one radiodynamic torpedo unit, $417,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be so expended unless the United States shall first acquire as heretofore provided the rights of the said John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York.

Section 4894 of the Revised Statutes is amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4894. All applications for patents shall be completed and prepared for examination within one year after the filing of the application, and in default thereof, or upon failure of the applicant to prosecute the same within one year after any action therein, of which notice shall have been given to the applicant, they shall be regarded as abandoned by the parties thereto, unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Patents that such delay was unavoidable: Provided, however, That no application shall be regarded as abandoned which has become the property of the Government of the United States and with respect to which the head of any department of the Government shall have certified to the Commissioner of Patents, within a period of three years, that the invention disclosed therein is important to the armament or defense of the United States: Provided further, That within 90 days, and not less than 30 days, before the expiration of any such three-year period the Commissioner of Patents shall, in writing, notify the head of the department interested in any pending application for patent, of the approaching expiration of the three-year period within which any application for patent shall have been pending."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this resolution is simply to make in order on the fortifications bill the items which have been read. It does not, of course, in any way bind the committee or the House to the adoption of such provisions.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. I say that the effect of the resolution is simply to make in order on the fortifications bill certain provisions which have been read, touching an invention known as the Hammond radiodynamic torpedo, and does not in any sense adopt those provisions. It simply makes them in order to be considered on the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry. When does the gentleman expect to take up the fortifications bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope, if we can have a sufficient attendance in the House, to take it up Monday.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] what he has in mind that probably the House will be doing all of next week?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that probably we would get through with this bill and perhaps the military appropriation bill, and then finish up the private claims and Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to run through the balance of the Private Calendar next week.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think so, too.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean by the military bill the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it will be feasible to take that up next week.

Mr. KITCHIN. It might be that we could get it through if we take it up, but if there is any real objection to that and we do not have a quorum here of course we would let it go over.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much of a contest there may be over it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand from the committee that there is none, but that it is all a unanimous report.

Mr. MANN. Of course appropriation bills are always unanimous reports. I have never seen the time when they did not produce quite a contest in the House, however.

Mr. KITCHIN. Or quite a talk in the House.

Mr. MANN. A contest over various items. It may not——

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope not. We are hoping to take up the sundry civil bill and finish it the week after.

Mr. MANN. The Army bill has not been reported.

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. MANN. Although we had a letter from the Secretary of War addressed to the Speaker, stating that they had left out an item in the Army bill as reported to the House, which he wanted to have inserted. I do not know what private connection he has. I presume he has known in advance what is to be reported. I do not.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman and the Speaker will have to get together on that, because the Secretary does not write me letters, nor do other members of the Cabinet. I hope you will help us get through with that military bill and the fortifications if we can.

Mr. MANN. I think nobody can complain of the help I have been giving this week.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a bit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. Monday.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of national parks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 12, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, whom we have been taught to call our Father, help us to realize the dignity it confers upon us, that our deportment in all the relationships of life may harmonize with that dignity. Impart unto us wisdom to guide, strength to sustain; purity, that we may emphasize our sonship, as enunciated and exemplified in the life and character of the Jesus of Nazareth, who taught us the way and the truth and the life, that we may live in Thee, through Thee, for Thee in a true and faithful service. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 10, 1916, was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, I may proceed for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table, he may be permitted to proceed, not to exceed 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in the event we should get into and not finish the fortification bill, I would not want to have it delayed for general debate. I would have no objection to the request if it was to follow the completion of that bill to-morrow, or if the bill did not come up to-morrow.

Mr. BORLAND. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would want to give the right of way to the fortification bill. If the fortification bill is on to-morrow, I would be willing to make the request contingent on the completion of the fortification bill.

The SPEAKER. Why not make the request after the completion of the fortification bill?

Mr. BORLAND. I understood there was some doubt about whether the bill would come up. If it does not, then I would make the request for 20 minutes after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that if the fortification bill is up to-morrow he may have not to exceed 20 minutes at the conclusion of the fortification bill, and if the fortification bill is not up to-morrow, that after the reading of the Journal and clearing up of business on the Speaker's table he shall have 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it makes it very awkward, when gentlemen ask unanimous consent to address the House at some future day, to refuse other people who want the same privilege. I suggest to the gentleman to take his chances to-morrow. He is always ready and prepared. If the situation is such to-morrow that it is feasible, there will be no objection then, but I shall object to setting a time in advance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the matter of the Senate amendment to the river and harbor bill, limiting the flow of the Chicago Sanitary Canal to 250,000 cubic feet of water.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon an amendment to the river and harbor bill as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed an address delivered by Hon. Robert Lansing before the Jefferson County Bar Association at Watertown, N. Y., on June 3, 1916.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech made by Hon. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, at the meeting of the Jefferson County Bar Association at Watertown, N. Y., recently. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement made by Mr. Hughes, the next President of the United States, addressed to Mr. HARDING, the chairman of the Republican national convention. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Reserving the right to object, I hope it will be put in that the gentleman announces now that he will be the next President, but it will never be announced later. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. It will be announced after the first Tuesday in November.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the statement made by Hon. Charles E. Hughes last Saturday when he received notification, very much to his surprise, of his nomination. [Laughter.] Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FIELDS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of important business.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DAY—UNITED STATES FLAG.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this being District day, I move that the House take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 14822) to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or improper use, within the District of Columbia, of the flag of the United States of America.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the bill H. R. 14822, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter any person who, within the District of Columbia, in any manner, for exhibition or display, shall place or cause to be placed any word, figure, mark, picture, design, drawing, or any advertisement of any nature upon any flag, standard, colors, or ensign of the United States of America; or shall expose or cause to be exposed to public view any flag, standard, colors, or ensign upon which shall have been printed, painted, or otherwise placed, or to which shall be attached, appended, affixed, or annexed any word, figure, mark, picture, design, or drawing, or any advertisement of any nature; or who, within the District of Columbia, shall manufacture, sell, expose for sale or to public view or give away or have in possession for sale or to be given away or for use for any purpose, any article or substance being an article of merchandise, or a receptacle for merchandise or article or thing for carrying or transporting merchandise, upon which shall have been printed, painted, attached, or otherwise placed a representation of any such flag, standard, colors, or ensign, to advertise, call attention to, decorate, mark, or distinguish the article or substance on which so placed; or who, within the District of Columbia, shall publicly mutilate, deface, defile or defy, trample upon or cast contempt, either by word or act, upon any such flag, standard, colors, or ensign, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or by imprisonment for not more than 30 days, or both, in the discretion of the court, and shall also forfeit a penalty of $50 for each such offense, to be recovered with costs in a civil action or suit in any court having jurisdiction; and such action or suit may be brought in the name of the United States of America, or by and in the name of any citizen; and such penalty, when collected by any citizen, less the cost and expense of action or suit and recovery, to be certified by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States; and two or more penalties may be sued for and recovered in the same action or suit. The words "flag, standard, colors, or ensign," as used herein, shall include any flag, standard, colors, ensign, or any picture or representation of either, or of any part or parts of either, made of any substance or represented on any substance, of any size evidently purporting to be either of said flag, standard, colors, or ensign of the United States of America or a picture or a representation of either, upon which shall be shown the colors, the stars and the stripes, in any number of either thereof, or of any part or parts of either, or by which the average person seeing the same without deliberation may believe the same to represent the flag, colors, standard, or ensign of the United States of America.

The possession within the District of Columbia by any person other than a public officer, as such, of any such flag, standard, colors, or ensign, on which shall be anything made unlawful by this act, shall be presumptive evidence that the same is in violation of this act, and was made, done, or created after this act takes effect, and that such flag, standard, colors, ensign, article, substance, or thing did not exist when this act takes effect.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by inserting, after the words "upon any" and before the word "flag," on line 7, the word "such."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this amendment clearly is an inadvertence. The word "such" would not belong in that place. I have an idea that possibly it was intended to insert the word "such" before the word "flag," on page 2, line 1. This is the first reference that there is in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Which copy of the bill is it—the one carrying the committee report or the other one?

Mr. MANN. I have the reported bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The amendment, I think, fits in on page 1, line 2, after the word "any" and before the word "flag" in the original bill which was before the committee.

Mr. MANN. Let us see. Of course you do not refer in the bill to the provision in the title. The word "such" is a reference to something that preceded it. This is the first place in the bill where you use the terms "flag, standard, colors, or ensign." It is not intended to say there—

Such flag, standard, colors, or ensign—

But—

Any flag, standard, colors, or ensign.

The word "such" belongs on the next page.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In what line?

Mr. MANN. Line 1, where the language is:

Or shall expose or cause to be exposed to public view any flag, standard, colors, or ensign—

And so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The amendment fits the copy of the bill which I have.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky has the wrong copy of the bill. This bill was originally referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the gentleman has the copy of the bill on the reference to that committee. The bill was subsequently referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and where he thinks the word "such" should go in is where I have already stated that it should go in. We both agree upon the place where it should go in, but whoever drew the amendment had the wrong copy of the bill before him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is quite evident.

Mr. MANN. So this amendment at this point should be disagreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And inserted where?

Mr. MANN. On page 2, line 1, before the word "flag."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the first committee amendment, in line 6, page 1, be disagreed to.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the word "such" be inserted after the word "any" and before the word "flag," on page 2, line 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, line 1, by inserting, after the word "any," the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out all after the word "court," in line 21, page 2, down to and including line 6, on page 3.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the bill is a copy of the law in several other States, but I do not wish to take issue with the gentleman from Illinois as to the sufficiency of the penalty without that.

Mr. MANN. This makes a double penalty, which I do not think we ought to enact.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As the gentleman says, the bill imposes a double penalty. I do not disagree with him as to that, and therefore accept the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. There is a committee amendment in line 16, page 3, to strike out the word "or."

The question being taken, the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now I move to amend by striking out the last paragraph of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on pages 3 and 4, by striking out the last paragraph, beginning with line 20, on page 3, and ending with line 3 on page 4.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides that if anyone has a tabooed flag in possession for sale or to be given away, or for use for any purpose, he is subject to a penalty. It prohibits the sale as well. Now, here is a provision which was inserted in reference to opium, when we forbade the importation of opium into the United States. We went to the extreme limit, and made the possession of opium presumptive evidence that it was wrongly imported, because practically there is no other way of getting it. I do not think we ought to extend that provision very far and make the possession of an article which is possibly perfectly harmless presumptive evidence of a crime. The bill provides for all these things very completely in its provisions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GUERNSEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of No. 257 on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The District of Columbia has the right of way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House joint resolution 91.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill, H. R. 14303, and I make that as a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 91; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] makes a preferential motion, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his motion just a minute?

Mr. SHERLEY. Just for a moment.

Mr. MAPES. House joint resolution No. 91 was reported by the District Committee some time ago. It is a resolution authorizing the Commissioner of Labor Statistics and Department of Labor to make a survey of the cost of living of wage earners in the District of Columbia. This is District day. The resolution is one in which the Department of Labor and the people who are concerned in social welfare work are very much interested. It would take only a very short time to pass it. It was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar Saturday, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected to its consideration at that time, with the statement that he thought it would be considered on District day in a very short time.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I do not feel that I have any option in the matter. I say that without regard to the bill that the gentleman has offered. I have been ready for months to pass the fortifications appropriation bill. It is a bill of the first magnitude, which ought to be passed and become a law now, and I am not willing to delay the consideration of it further.

Mr. MAPES. This would not delay the gentleman's bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. That might or might not be true. We all know what sometimes happens. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my motion.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman understands that this can be done to-day practically only by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the fortification bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MAPES. I ask for two minutes to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I will not raise the point of no quorum. Of course we all understand that it practically requires unanimous consent to adopt the gentleman's motion under the circumstances under which we are operating to-day. But I do not have charge of the resolution and will not make the point of no quorum, for the reason that the chairman of the District Committee is present, as well as the gentleman who has charge of the joint resolution on the floor, and the introducer of it. If I had charge of the resolution on the floor, I would not consent to this procedure.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wyoming rise?

Mr. MONDELL. To inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky, who has charge of the bill, if he expects to have any general debate on the fortification bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have had requests from two gentlemen, neither of whom do I see present. I think it is due to the House that an explanation should be made of the bill, which I shall endeavor to make, and I think we ought to have reasonable debate, which I trust will be upon the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have 20 minutes, which will be upon the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is my intention to let the gentleman be recognized, and on the conclusion of his remarks I will undertake to explain the bill to the committee.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is agreed to, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] will take the chair until the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] comes in.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SIMS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14303, the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Wyoming obtain recognition from the Chair.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman intend to take the floor now?

Mr. SHERLEY. I prefer to take the floor later in full explanation of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to discuss the fortifications bill, but in the necessary temporary absence of minority members of the subcommittee, it seems to me proper that some member of the minority of the committee should make a statement with regard to the bill.

We are all in favor of preparedness. The Republican Party has just made a ringing declaration on that subject, and the Democratic Party in its convention at St. Louis will undoubtedly endeavor to make a declaration that is even more ringing. Everybody is in favor of proper and reasonable preparedness. Most of the differences of opinion relate to what one considers proper and reasonable preparedness.

It is well to keep calm and cool, if possible, at all times and in all situations. In conditions like the present, with the major part of the civilized world at war, with trouble on our own Mexican border, it is natural that people should not only become tremendously interested in the matter of the preparation for war, but it is natural that some people should become excited. It is also true that there are some people in the world who have an interest in the preparations for war, to whom preparations for war in the matter of armament means profit. I do not know to what extent these gentlemen have influenced the public mind, but certain it is that out of the interest which is naturally taken in these matters in times like these, out of the excitement that has been created some very extraordinary proposals have come; at least they would have been considered very extraordinary a short time ago.

A year ago it would have been very difficult, indeed, to have found anyone under the flag who would have advocated universal compulsory military service, and to me it is rather extraordinary that even the present conditions of the world should have brought forward any considerable number of people to advocate that kind of so-called preparedness. That plan and policy is at variance with the views that have been held by the great majority of our people from the beginning. It is, however, perhaps not extraordinary that out of the constant and intense agitation of the past year have come propositions of military and naval establishments far greater than our people have in the past approved, and it is perhaps not strange that some in this condition of affairs have advocated programs extending over a period of years which, if undertaken, would serve notice upon all the world not only that we were desirous of being prepared but that we had as a people concluded to adopt the very system of militarism which most of us believe is responsible for the present war in Europe.

The extraordinary thing has been that any considerable number of people have been led to approve of these extreme propositions. In this condition of affairs it is a very good time, I think, for some of us at least to emphasize the importance of keeping calm and of proceeding in this matter of preparedness in a reasonable and sensible way. I can recall the time when some of us who have not been in favor of the great programs that have been proposed were criticized because we were in favor of larger programs, military and naval, than at that particular time were popular.

I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs at the time the Army was increased to its present size, or its size up to the increase of a few months ago, the time when reorganization was had, and I remember that that very reasonable increase, and that very much needed reorganization, was severely criticized in certain quarters, and, curiously enough, as my memory wanders back to other years, I find that some of those who in the past have been for the smallest programs seem to be to-day for the largest programs, their excuse being that conditions have changed; that we are confronted with a situation new and novel. We are confronted with a situation which is new and novel in this respect only, that the world is now witnessing the inevitable outcome and consequence of the maintenance of vast military establishments. Whenever a people or peoples make the maintenance of military establishments the important part of their business, and nations are held continuously under arms, they are laying the foundations of irritations, jealousies, ambitions, which eventually lead to conflict. How much better it would have been, it is urged, if some of the nations now engaged in war in Europe had been better prepared, how much better it would have been for England, some insist, had she been thoroughly organized with as large a military establishment as Germany at the outbreak of the war.

No one knows how that condition of affairs, had it been possible, would have affected the present situation or would have affected the situation at the outbreak of the present war, but everyone knows that the history of the world for 20 years past would not have been what it has been had England in addition to her enormous naval establishment attempted the impossible task of keeping her people constantly under arms in great numbers. It can not be truthfully said that such establishments, had they been possible, would have prevented the war now going on. It may be more truthfully asserted, or asserted with more basis of truth and logic, that any such system inaugurated and maintained by Great Britain in years past would have led to conflicts, fierce and bloody, long before the outbreak of the present war.

One reason for the very extreme view that some hold as to what we should do in the matter of military preparation, one of the arguments that has been most effective in creating public sentiment in favor of enormous establishments and vast expenditures has been the exaggerations and misstatements, if not downright prevarications, touching our situation in the matter of preparedness, and I do not think that Congress should sit quietly in the midst of the charges that have been made of its alleged neglect of duty in the matter of preparation. As a matter of fact we have made much better preparation in the past than the extremists would have the people believe, and the country is not and never has been in the defenseless condition proclaimed by some of those now demanding the establishment of a permanent military system in this country. We can not too frequently reiterate the fact that our influence as a Nation, our power against aggression, is not, never has been, never will be wholly or principally measured by the number of men under arms at any given moment, by the number or size of our fortifications, or by the strength of our fleet.

It has been claimed on this floor that the world has grown no better in 3,000 years; that men go to war now with as little reason as they did then. We all know that is not entirely true, but it is true that human nature remains unfortunately very largely unchanged; but if men have not grown better, nations have grown wiser, and no nation attacks another in these days, no nation commits acts of aggression against another in these days, without counting not only the initial but the final cost, and all the world knows that no nation would or will attack us wantonly, confidently, simply because we have not at the moment a large number of men under arms. All the world knows that here are 100,000,000 people who, whatever may be said of their training or lack of training, have in them the making of better soldiers, man for man, than any such number of people elsewhere in the world.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think that under modern conditions a nation proposing aggression against another would count considerably upon the success of a first blow, a first assault, that it would commit on another nation?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; that is true where the nation proposing the assault is the immediate neighbor of the nation it proposes to assault, with no natural barriers between, and particularly if the aggressor is not only the best prepared but the strongest numerically and in resources, as, for instance, take the case of France and Germany, Germany thoroughly prepared and France unprepared.

Germany could, in such a case, overrun France; with no natural defensive barriers between, could overrun her to an extent that would settle the contest in a very short time; but our situation is very different, for, certain experts to the contrary notwithstanding, I still insist that 3,000 miles of turbulent water on our eastern border is a barrier across which it does take much time and effort to transport troops and land them, even on comparatively undefended coasts. Back of those coasts are the people I have been talking about, a great proportion of whom are still more or less accustomed to the use of arms; people who have more to fight for than any other people; people who realize more than any other people on earth the value of the Government they have and of the country of which they are citizens and the importance of maintaining it and its institutions—not only 100,000,000 people, but resources which, in extent and character, dwarf into comparative insignificance the resources of any other people on earth. We surpass all nations in transportation, in the production of all of those things necessary for the maintenance of a people in war or peace, in extent and variety of manufacturing industries available for the production and the manufacture of all those things necessary to maintain armies and civilian populations in the midst of war. After all, it is not so much the number of men that we shall keep under arms, it is not so much the number of dreadnaughts with which we shall plow the seas, as it is the character of our citizenship, the limitless extent and variety of our resources, and the enormous area of our country.

However, we should not be unprepared. We should be well prepared. One of the greatest faults of some of the programs of so-called preparedness has been that they were not in fact preparedness programs; that they were military programs pure and simple; programs proposing a complete and revolutionary change in our military system; proposals that eventually would change the very character of our institutions. A curious thing is that many of those who have proposed the largest, the most expensive, and most far-reaching of these programs have been the least mindful of those things that may be comparatively cheaply, easily, readily, and quickly done to place us in a position of reasonable defense.

Many who have talked most of battleships costing $20,000,000 each, to be launched five years hence, and possibly be obsolete when placed in commission; of continental armies marshaling our boys from the plow, the shop, and the professions and setting them to toting guns throughout the land, have been mighty little interested in those things which can be quickly, cheaply, and effectively done to place us in a better situation and condition of defense. To such men and minds cheaply and quickly constructed submarines have not been a matter of interest. To them the increase of the efficiency of the citizen soldiery under the militia established at the beginning by the forefathers has not been a matter of great importance. Whether they have realized it or not, their interest has been largely in things that sound large, in things that mean profits to some one, in things that mean rapid and earnestly and eagerly sought promotions to those in military establishments. Whether they have realized it or not, those things that they have sought after have been things which spelled profits, privileges, and promotions, while those things that we believe in, who believe in what we deem to be proper preparedness, are the things that are not so ambitious; that do not appeal to those seeking promotions; that do not savor and smack of militarism; and that will not, whatever else their effect may be, modify by their influence our system of government or affect unfortunately the character of our citizenship.

The Congress has made sufficient progress on bills having to do with military matters that we can now form a reasonably accurate estimate of what provisions will be made for those services and establishments which are now embraced under the term "preparedness." The Army reorganization bill is a law, the naval bill has passed the House, this fortifications bill will be disposed of in the House in the next day or two, and the sundry civil bill, with appropriations for Government powder factories and arsenals, will follow soon. Altogether these measures will enlarge and amplify the national defenses along all lines. Some will think the increases and enlargements are too great, some will insist they are too small. Of this, however, we are certain we are not to have the continental army, with its threat of conscription, and there is almost an equal certainty that whatever the naval building program may be when finally settled upon, it will not contain the enormous five-year program which the administration proposed.

On the other hand, the naval bill as it passed the House did contain provisions for submarines, for aircraft, and for other classes of defense which were not included in the administration's plan. Out of all of the contest we have secured and are likely to secure a much better scheme of actual preparedness than the administration proposed or approved while escaping the foolish and dangerous plans of pure militarism and tremendous continued expense which were a part of the administration's program.

Feeling as I do in regard to real preparedness, I am very glad, indeed, to support this bill. It is a preparedness bill, pure and simple. It does not mean profits, it does not spell promotions, it does not extend privileges.

Last year we appropriated about $6,000,000 for the work and services provided for under this bill. I think I was the only Member of the House who, when the fortifications bill was under discussion last year, suggested that we were not doing quite enough; that we were not going quite fast enough either in fortifications or in providing for increase of reserve of field artillery or ammunition.

I did not say that with very much vehemence, and I said it with a good deal of modesty, because I realized that the men in direct charge of the bill on both sides of the House, particularly the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], have given a great deal of study to the subject, and were better informed as to detail than I was, and I was inclined to follow their suggestions. It so happened, however, that having read something of the doings on the European front and having been impressed, but I hope not excited by them, I thought we were not progressing rapidly enough securing the reserves of guns of various kinds provided for in this bill. As I have said, I think I am the only one who expressed that opinion on the floor, so that at that time I was somewhat in advance of public sentiment on the subject of real preparedness. This bill contains largely increased appropriations all along the line for purposes of real preparedness, increasing by about $20,000,000 of direct appropriation, in addition to about $12,000,000 of authorizations, the appropriations of last year's bill. Those of us who are for a real bona fide preparedness are prepared to support the bill, and, so far as I am concerned and now informed, nearly every item in it.

The bill has, I believe, been drawn with care. I should not be doing my duty if I did not express my appreciation of the work and study which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and his subcommittee, including Messrs. GILLETT and GOOD of the minority, have given to this bill, the conscientious way in which they have gone into all the questions involved, and the care with which they have made recommendations with regard to appropriations.

If I shall have anything to say in opposition to any of these items it will be along the line of increases rather than decreases. While the committee has in the majority of cases followed very closely the estimates, and in some cases have gone beyond them, there are a few cases in which the committee has reduced the items quite considerably below the estimates. I think in a majority of cases the committee was entirely justified in its action. The things provided for in this bill are what the American people have had in mind, those of them who have not been carried off their feet and who have not wanted the establishment of militarism—what they have had in mind when they talked preparedness. First, preparedness in harbor fortifications. Right at that point it is well to recall the fact that some gentlemen who are proposing the most extravagant programs are those who have made the most misleading and erroneous statements with regard to our harbor fortifications. Those of our officers who are best qualified to speak—and they are as well qualified as any men on earth—tell us that our harbor defenses are the best in the world; that nowhere else on earth are there harbor defenses comparable to them, taking the country as a whole. One gentleman high in our Military Establishment, who has been among the loudest and the most strenuous in his insistence upon enormous numbers of men under arms and vast expenditures on land and sea, two years ago in the hearing on this bill suggested that probably we had all the harbor defenses we needed or would need for some time to come, and that as a matter of fact in some instances our preparations and defenses were possibly unnecessarily expensive. Of course these works do not defend the coast far from the great harbors against an effort that might be made to land troops. Nowhere on earth have troops been successfully landed in large numbers on the open coast or in open roadstead. Nowhere on earth have troops in large numbers been successfully landed and maintained their foothold, even with reasonable facilities for landing, against any considerable and earnestly contested opposition.

We have had a remarkable illustration of that in the efforts of the allies in the region of the Dardanelles. Troops were landed on the Gallipoli Peninsula, where there were some harbor facilities and few available troops to prevent landing. They never got far. Tens of thousands of men, the best troops of England and her colonies, went to their graves in that effort to secure and maintain a landing against troops that we are not willing to admit were better or as good as practically raw American levies would be.

This bill provides for further extension of our harbor defenses along lines that will be explained by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. I do not want to go into detail, because I do not want to cover ground that he can cover better than anyone else. It provides for some new and some larger seacoast guns; it provides for increase of ammunition for these guns, made necessary, it is believed, by the lessons of the European war; it provides for a large increase in our reserves of field artillery; for some mobile guns of increased size and ammunition for those guns; for some increased defense of our insular possessions.

It makes, I believe, adequate provision for these things which provide defense and do not lead to offense.

These provisions are for defense, for caring for our coasts and our harbors, for providing those implements that would be necessary to arm and supply troops in the improbable case of a foreign attack.

In conclusion I want to compliment the subcommittee on its work, and hope that the bill will pass without any considerable amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON assumed the chair.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am indebted for the kindly reference of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] touching myself. I trust that in view of those references I may not be thought ungracious in saying that because of the recent declaration of his party on the subject of preparedness I was particularly interested in his exposition of what constitutes preparedness. Certainly, if the view he has expressed is shared by the majority of his party, they will find no quarrel with one of their unsuccessful candidates for the Presidency, Mr. Ford, on that issue.

The foreign policy of a nation should rest in justice—justice to itself, justice to the world. But, whatever that policy may be, the armaments of a nation must bear direct relationship to it. The armaments of a nation should be sufficiently strong to maintain that policy. They should not be more than that, for that would be folly. To make them less than that would mean to do inadequately what is of the very highest importance to every nation. Unless the armaments of a nation are equal to the maintenance of the policy of that nation, in the long run that policy will have to be abandoned or curtailed.

Now, all nations believe that their world policy is an equitable one and based on justice. Certainly we in America believe that ours is. We recognize that this country desires the possessions of no other people, that it has no national aim that runs athwart the legitimate desire of any other people, and, as I said a year ago, the Nation in very truth pursues peace as a passion.

But, while that is true, it does not follow that because our desire is not one of hostility toward any other people we will be immune from any need to maintain by force our national aims and purposes. The United States from its beginning determined to face the world alone, without entangling alliances, without any of the obligations or any of the aids that come from partnership with others. That policy inaugurated in the beginning, I believe, will and ought to be maintained in the future, but it is a policy that carries with it obligations of the most serious kind.

If I might be bold enough to undertake to define the policy of the United States, it is that it proposes not in any way to seek territorial aggrandizement, but it is determined to possess and protect every bit of soil that is now under its dominion and its flag. As an incident to that protection, it has long ago declared that it would not look upon the establishment, by any of the European nations, of a foothold upon the continents of America with any degree of acquiescence or willingness. The Monroe doctrine carries with it also a responsibility, responsibility not alone to prevent European countries from obtaining a foothold in America, but in order to justify that prevention, it carries with it in large degree an obligation for the peace and good order of all of the Americas.

Our policy carries the determination to protect American rights everywhere, to maintain the true freedom of the seas, and to maintain the rights of a peaceful nation even in the presence of world-wide war.

The most dominant fact in the history of the age is the constant contraction of the world. Every year it grows immeasurably smaller. It is not measured in statute miles. It is measured in time, and the facilities for the interchange of intelligences and of commodities between man and man. Judged by that true standard, the world to-day is infinitely smaller than it ever was before. And with the narrowing and contracting of the earth has come the enlargement of the sphere that America plays in it. Our flag is no longer confined to the mainland of America but floats over possessions half the world distant. Our country has become of necessity one of the great exporting countries of the world. You can not have permanent prosperity in America without exporting practically a third of your manufactured products each year. We have ceased to be simply an export nation of raw foodstuffs. We have become in very truth and must remain an export nation of manufactured goods.

When this world war is over there will be a renewed struggle for the possession of foreign markets more intense, more pronounced, and of a far wider range than the world has ever witnessed before. The markets that we obtain now by default of our competitors who are engaged in the European war will have to be held under the stern terms of active, acute competition. Competition between nations breeds misunderstandings and misunderstandings frequently result in quarrels, and while it is always the province of diplomacy to adjust those quarrels and differences peacefully, failing that, after all, nations must be able, if they desire to insist upon their position, to defend them by force.

The people of America have lived for many years past under the belief, somewhat warranted, that our isolation gave us immunity from the obligations and the duties that rest upon the other nations of the earth, but they have awakened to a realization that that isolation has in many ways gone, and will continue more and more to disappear. They have learned by the bitter lesson of the experience of others that it is not true that it takes two to make a quarrel. They have learned that the justice of your own position or the righteousness of it is not necessarily a guaranty of its prevailing or of your being free of any obligation to maintain and defend that position. And, awakening from that dream with a realization and a courage that is sometimes not possessed by public men, they are demanding that the Congress of the United States shall see to it that this country is put in a position to properly maintain its rights, no matter where, when, or by whom they shall be assailed. [Applause.]

Men may have doubted a few months ago whether that was the determination of the people of America, but no man who looks about with eyes to see, with a vision that is able to take in the sky line and not merely the immediate prospect about him, can doubt the fact. And let me say here that there is no more pernicious notion than that preparedness is adequate that is simply one that would prevent invasion of America. Men here on the floor and in the cloakroom constantly talk about our not needing to fear any invasion. That may or may not be true, but that is not the only problem. In the first place, it has become axiomatic that the best defense is an offense. I do not ever want to see my country wage a war of aggression, but when it comes, if it must come, that she must wage a defensive war, I want her to be able to wage that war agressively and offensively. [Applause.] If we must have war, I prefer to carry it to the other man's country, and not confine it to my own. [Applause.] And I believe no defense of America is adequate that does not undertake to enable this country in the maintenance of its rights, to offensively, in the true sense of that term, wage what war it has to wage.

It is interesting to recall that since we won our independence every war we have had with a foreign nation has been a war of our making and a war that we did wage offensively. So it is, holding these views, believing as I do that a nation occupying the position that we do in the world's affairs, with a necessary destiny, no matter what men may wish, of occupying more and more a place in world affairs, with more and more contact with other people, with more and more obligations placed upon us, must be prepared for all emergencies. I for one am ready and anxious that this country should put itself in a position of power commensurate with its true position among the nations of the earth; and it is with pleasure that I present to this Congress a bill making provision for the fortifications of America, and providing for the mobile artillery and ammunition therefor, that is not only the largest in amount, which in itself is not important, but which I believe to be the most far-reaching of any fortification bill that has ever been presented to the country since modern fortifications were first established.

The fortification bill has always been a popular bill. It has had many friends that were friends because they knew of its true scope and of its purpose. It has also many friends who are for it because they do not realize its scope, and because they think it will do what it never was intended to do, and what it never can do—make unnecessary other preparations in the way of a navy and a mobile army. I repeat, it has many friends who are under the impression that if you spend enough for fortifications you will not need to spend anything for a mobile army and will not need to bother quite so much about a navy.

There never was a more mistaken idea as to the scope that fortifications play in the defense of the country. The first defense of a country situated as ours is must of necessity be the Navy. The second line of defense within a restricted area must be your fortifications, and after that must come your mobile Army. And your first line of defense is only made really effective by virtue of your second line.

Fortifications are not erected with the idea of preventing a landing anywhere upon the shores of America. The wealth of even this richest of all nations would not be sufficient to erect fortifications so numerous and so near together as to make that possible in even a limited degree. Fortifications are intended to protect strategic points; intended to preserve, for the use of the Navy as bases, certain harbors; to deny the use of those harbors to the enemy; to protect from bombardment and inadmissible damage certain great centers of population; to deny certain waters to an enemy and compel, in case of a landing, the landing at a point not so favorably situated to the advantage of the enemy as the place fortified. They are intended to enable the fleet of America to act offensively and not defensively; to enable your fleet, instead of being tied to your shores, to protect your great cities; to go out and seek the enemy upon the high seas, and then in the event of an indeterminate action to enable that fleet to retire in security behind those fortifications, freed from the danger of immediate pursuit and attack by the enemy. They have served their purpose when they prevent an enemy capturing them from the sea and require a landing in order to overcome them.

Now, this can not be too often emphasized, because those who are trying diligently to provide the country with proper fortifications are constantly met by statements in the public press, and even here on this floor where men ought to know better, that the fortifications of America are inadequate. These statements are based on a complete misconception of the functions that those fortifications play. Judging them by their proper standards, the fortifications of America are a credit to the country; and with the additions that are proposed under the scheme which has been outlined by the Board of Review that has recently canvassed the entire subject, they will be adequate to all the needs of the country.

The history of fortifications in America is unique and interesting, and I may be pardoned if I say that I take some pride in the fact that our modern system of fortifications was begun under a Democratic President, Grover Cleveland; and the country may take pleasure in the fact that from that day to this, while things have not always been done as rapidly as they should have been done, the character of the fortifications, their location, and all the details of their construction have always been in accord with the very best judgment of the experts of the Army and of the Navy touching the need for them. In other words, despite the constant and ignorant abuse that is leveled at Congress, it has not undertaken, in regard to the fortifications of America, to set up its individual judgment against that of the men trained to know, but it has accepted their judgment, and these fortifications are the result of elaborate study by the best-trained minds that we could produce.

In presenting this bill to the House a year ago I stated that there were a number of matters in connection with the fortifications that I believed would need to be reviewed, and that additions would have to be made in order to make those fortifications in certain places adequate, because of the very great change that has come about in the armament of battleships, the increased range, and increased accuracy of gunfire by improved methods of observation. I stated then that I hoped to be able to present to this Committee of the Whole a report by a board of Army officers who should review the entire coast defenses of continental United States and the insular possessions, and would be in a position to report in detail what was necessary in order to augment those defenses.

That survey has been made, and the report of that board has been made. It is manifestly improper that I should undertake to present here in detail the recommendations of that board. While it may be proper that as to many matters we should have absolute publicity, it must be apparent to anyone who has considered the matter that as to fortifications at fixed places, where the topography and hydrography remained practically the same, to give in detail what is proposed or what is existing would afford to a possible enemy information that ought not to be his, and could not do any great good to offset that direct harm.

But while it is not proper that I should give you that report in detail—I may say in passing that all of it was before the subcommittee on fortifications and was considered in its entirety—it is proper that I should say to you in a general way what was embodied in that report.

Broadly speaking, that report contemplated the addition, at certain important harbors in America, of guns of extreme range of fire, in order to enable those defenses to meet the fire of any hostile fleet that might be brought against them. Because of the increased volume of fire that is now possible with modern battleships it was thought requisite in some cases to add to the volume of the fire of the defenses, and in a limited number of cases it was thought desirable to deny the use of harbors, not of the first importance and not near any large centers of population, but harbors that might be of advantage as bases to an enemy's fleet, and it is proposed to accomplish that result by installing a limited number of guns of extreme long range.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What is the longest range of guns in land fortifications now?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I shall be glad to come to the whole question of ranges a little later on. Roughly speaking, the guns that we are now proposing to mount, the 12-inch guns with high angle fire, will have a range in excess of 30,000 yards, and the 16-inch guns that we are proposing to mount will also have a range in excess of 30,000 yards. And I may say in passing that 30,000 yards is certainly a distance beyond which we may never expect to see any real engagement between a fleet and a land fortification.

The total additional armament for continental United States included in the above project comprises twenty-two 16-inch guns and twenty-four 12-inch guns mounted for long-range fire, twenty-three 6-inch and four 3-inch guns, and forty-eight 16-inch mortars. For the insular possessions, eight 12-inch guns mounted for long range fire, and for the Panama Canal four 16-inch guns and four 12-inch guns mounted for long range fire, and twelve 16-inch mortars.

The program outlined by the board of review contemplated an expenditure of something over $96,000,000 as being necessary in order to supply all of the additional armanent necessary and the total amount of ammunition now thought requisite for that armament. The estimates were submitted with the idea of completing that program in a legislative way in about four years. In other words, the estimates as a rule bore a relationship of one-fourth of the total amount deemed necessary for the final completion of the project.

There may be those who will urge that a speedier program than that should have been adopted, but you must consider that there is a limitation upon the officers in charge as to the amount of work that can be turned out in the way of ordnance, either when manufactured in Government arsenals or in private factories, and also as to emplacements and the accessories that go with a complete fortification, and that to have undertaken to have put upon the War Department a burden greater than is represented by this program would have been to undertake something that would neither be economically wise nor probably result in any great saving of time.

I want to say in passing that while this is a large sum and the additional armament suggested is considerable, it does not follow by any means that the present condition of fortifications of America is alarming. There will never come a time, there never should come a time, as long as armament is necessary, when the fortifications of America will be completed and when it will not be necessary and desirable to add to them. There are certain places, certain cities of magnitude—New York, San Francisco, Boston—where it is desirable that there should be installed additional guns in order to offset the possibility of long-range bombardment of these cities.

It does not follow, however, that until these fortifications are there emplaced these cities are at the mercy of an enemy. The trouble with a great many critics is, that not having gone into the details of an intricate subject, such as this, they jump from an actual fact to a conclusion that is not at all warranted. Hearing that it is possible to outrange some of our guns by several thousand yards, they immediately declare that the fortifications are useless and are at the mercy of the enemy, and that New York, Boston, and other great cities of the coast can be bombarded and captured. They seem to disregard not only the Navy, not only the auxiliary defense that may come in the way of submarines, not only the mines, but they deny to the American people and to the Army any sort of ability or ingenuity in immediately creating defenses that, while of a temporary character, would be adequate to prevent what they so confidently predict. They fight every stage of the imaginary fight with a loss to America and a victory to the enemy; they accord to them all knowledge and to us all ignorance.

Mr. MANN. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. No.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman just spoke of defense by mines. I want to ask for information—take New York City, for instance, which might be bombarded by the enemy fleet at some miles distant, would it be practicable to place mines so that the enemy fleet could not get near enough to bombard the city?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would not in the sense of fixed mines. Of course, what might be done by strewing the ocean with floating mines, as has been done abroad, is another problem. There is a mine defense of New York, but it is confined of necessity to waters that are somewhat of a restricted area and not out on the high seas.

Mr. MANN. A defense of mines would prevent an enemy ship coming up the channel.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, it would prevent the use of the channel and any runby, and by the very uncertainty of it have a great deterring effect upon the enemy.

There has been so much said about New York that it may not be improper if I should state this. The usual charge touching the city of New York is that it is possible for certain ships of the largest type to reach a particular point, and from that point to be out of range of existing batteries and still be able to bombard portions of the city. That is true, but that condition will be remedied as speedily as can be done. But it does not follow that if war should break to-morrow that we would be unable to meet that situation and prevent that bombardment, laying aside the defense by the Navy and of the submarines. In other words, it would be not at all difficult to put up on temporary emplacements and carriages guns of sufficient range at Rockaway, where they propose to put permanent fortifications, to make it exceedingly unhealthy for any fleet to undertake to lay outside in this particular place and bombard New York. While the condition at New York ought to be and is going to be remedied, there is no reason why the people of America should be unduly alarmed or made to believe that conditions are very much worse than they actually are. And only those who have the most superficial understanding of the question very long entertain the views so graphically written of and depicted in some papers.

Mr. MANN. At Norfolk we are contemplating erecting a new fort which, I suppose, would protect the entrance. I assume that as far as mines are concerned it would be very easy to prevent an enemy ship coming into Norfolk, but would it be practicable now by using the mines to prevent an enemy fleet standing outside in the ocean and firing in far enough to strike where we would have our fort when we place it?

Mr. SHERLEY. Norfolk to-day is well protected from any danger of attack by a foreign fleet. The purpose of putting the fortification at Cape Henry is not only to make assurance doubly sure, touching the cities of Baltimore, Norfolk, and Washington, but it is also to deny the lower part of the Chesapeake to an enemy fleet as a base and to secure it to our own fleet with the advantage of enabling that fleet on issuing from the Chesapeake to take battle formation under the protection of land guns. The situation touching Norfolk is not at all alarming and never has been.

Mr. MANN. I did not suppose so. I was asking about the planting of mines, whether we had got such information from the war in Europe that we could locate mines, except floating mines, out there to do any good.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mines can be located almost anywhere, but practically a permanent mine field is of no great value unless it is protected by what we speak of as the secondary batteries, the small guns, and the reason is that having mined a given area, unless there is protection, the enemy would simply countermine that area and would immediately free the waters of the mines and then proceed at its leisure; so that practically mine fields are confined to areas covered by secondary batteries. Floating mines, however, might be strewn anywhere, and their use in the European war has been greatly beyond what anybody heretofore has anticipated. The trouble with the floating mine is that it sometimes hurts the nation that puts it out as much as it does the enemy, and I suspect there are a great number of ships that have gone down abroad that have been sunk by mines planted by their own country.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman spoke a moment ago of the practicability of building temporary foundations for the installation of guns as an aid to the present fortifications around New York City. Have we such guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, we have a great many of them. We have a great many 12-inch guns, and we are proposing to mount those guns on permanent barbette carriages with high angle of fire that would give a range of fire of over 30,000 yards.

Mr. REAVIS. It could be speedily done?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is no question about that, and I think that is also true as to mortars that could be moved from the inner lines of defenses not now important, and placed so as to command that particular area of water that is at present outside of the range of existing armaments.

Mr. REAVIS. Has the gentleman made any computation as to whether any fleet other than that of Great Britain would be superior to our own fleet plus the coast fortifications at New York?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course that question probably could not be answered because it is very speculative, but I certainly do not believe that any fleet, the British or any other, would undertake to attack the American fleet supported by the fortifications of New York, if that is what the gentleman wants to know.

Mr. REAVIS. I entirely agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has not the danger of bombardment of our coast cities been somewhat exaggerated owing to the fact that, in speaking of the range of the large guns on board naval vessels, the estimate has been made as if the range would be the same that could be obtained upon land works with the same guns at a high angle of fire, whereas that high angle of fire is not possible with guns mounted on vessels?

Mr. SHERLEY. That in a measure is true, and yet it is true that on vessels of the Queen Elizabeth type, mounting 15-inch guns at an angles of 15 degrees, a range was obtained of something like 21,000 yards, and it is believed that some of those guns could be fired at a 20-degree elevation, which would considerably increase the range. In that connection I might say just this: The danger is not from a fleet standing off outside the range of our batteries and subduing those batteries. I shall come a little later on to some experiments that we had at Mobile. Certainly no man who witnessed those experiments has very much fear of any fleet commanded by men with a proper appreciation of the value of ammunition standing off and undertaking to put out of commission a modern fortification by long-range fire. The danger that exists in certain places is the danger of bombardment of centers of population where accuracy of fire would not be a requisite, where any shot coming within a given range might do a damage so great as to be inestimable. The danger of their shooting with accuracy so as to put out of commission a fortification at ranges like 21,000 yards is, I think, absolutely negligible, and the cost in ammunition and in risk of the fleet is beyond that which any reasonable commander of a naval vessel would undertake.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is aware of course that the English fleet firing at a distance of 17,000 yards with 15-inch guns made very little impression upon the Turkish fortifications at Gallipoli?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course the fortifications of the Dardenelles according to a report I have of what are supposed to be the fortifications that there existed, were nothing like in point of power and range the fleet that went up against them, but what had been prophesied by every student of the subject occurred. I have stated repeatedly on this floor that there has been no instance in modern warfare of a fortified place being taken from the sea, and I cited the instance of Port Arthur, where the Japanese fleet first undertook it and afterwards abandoned it and effected the capture of Port Arthur by a very costly land attack; and last year while the Dardenelles campaign was in progress I expressed that same opinion, and the history of that unfortunate expedition on the part of England is now known to us all, though it is interesting in that connection to say that I doubt if the view expressed by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] would be entertained generally touching that campaign. The chief criticism of the Dardenelles fight was not only undertaking to attack those particular fortifications, whether that was a field of warfare that offered sufficient reward in case of victory to warrant the expenditure, but the great criticism was that it was undertaken by a fleet without troops to support the attack.

If England had carried to the Dardanelles a sufficient army to have instantly undertaken her land attack instead of doing it days later, after the Turkish Army had made defensive preparation for a land attack, the result of that campaign might have been very different from what it was, but that is aside.

The Board of Review not only determined the places that should have additional fortifications, but it determined the character of guns that should be used, and decided that in the future primary armament should consist of guns of not less than 16-inch caliber.

That means that of all future armament we propose to have guns with a maximum range so great as to make it practically impossible their being outranged by any guns of any ship that might be brought against them. They also determined in favor of the disappearing gun carriage concerning which there has been from time to time dispute—it was brought up upon this floor last year—and after a consideration of its merits and demerits decided to retain that type of carriage, but provided that the carriage should permit of an all-around fire and of an elevation considerably in excess of the elevation possessed by the old guns.

Gentlemen will recall that many of our guns were mounted with a maximum elevation of 10 degrees and a minimum depression of 5 degrees, and we carried last year a provision in the bill altering those guns so as to give a maximum elevation of 15 degrees and thereby, by lightening the weight of the projectile, practically greatly to increase the range of those guns. That work has been carried on and is very near to completion, and as a result of it those 12-inch guns will have a range, using a 700-pound projectile, of something like 22,000 yards, which will be adequate to meet the long range of existing battleships, but it is proposed in the future to have guns in the primary armament of not less than 16-inch caliber.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was going to say, as the gentleman spoke awhile ago of erecting a temporary fort at Rockaway Beach, N. Y., I would like to read a portion of a letter here about the cars on which to carry these guns——

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will wait I am going to get to the question of the mobile seacoast artillery and I would like to go along with some degree of continuity in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I only asked because I thought the gentleman was well posted on the subject and it might be well to have that brought out.

Mr. SHERLEY. The board also considered the question of ammunition and adopted a scheme very much in excess of what we had heretofore provided in connection with a reserve supply of ammunition for seacoast guns.

Under the plan that had heretofore been followed, it was contemplated to have a reserve for guns outside of the continental United States of two hours—what we call the two-hour supply—and of guns in the United States a one-hour supply, the original theory of the latter being that, inasmuch as our two coasts would not be imperiled at the same time and we would have notice of the coast that would probably be subject to attack, it would be possible by transfer of ammunition to give an adequate supply to the guns. That two-hour supply was not an amount arbitrarily fixed, but it was an amount fixed as representing the ammunition that would probably be necessary in a given engagement, figuring the length of time the forts would be under fire by a fleet attacking them.

The history of the European war, however, has been in nothing so surprising, startling as it has been in many aspects, as it has been in the tremendous quantities of ammunition that have been used and the overwhelming, and in most instances determining, part that has been played by artillery. There is no estimate to-day so extravagant touching the need of ammunition that is not to-morrow liable to be inadequate in face of the actual facts that are daily unfolding themselves to the belligerents in the war.

The result was that no man with his eyes open to the facts would any longer be willing to rest under a plan for reserve ammunition that would not go considerably beyond that which had heretofore been thought adequate by those who adopted the scheme. Therefore the board in its recommendation decided that for guns in continental United States, except guns of 8-inch caliber and upward, on inner lines of defense, allowances equal to one-half the accuracy life of the respective calibers should be had; for mortars, except on inner-line defenses, an allowance equal to one-fourth the accuracy life; for armament of 8-inch caliber and upward on inner lines of defense in continental United States, allowances equal to one-half those of outer lines. For guns in the insular possessions and for the Canal Zone, allowances equal to the accuracy life of the respective calibers; for mortars, an allowance equal to two-thirds of the accuracy life.

Now, gentlemen will realize that rifled cannon, as a result of each shot, deteriorate to some slight degree, and after a given number of shots the rifling becomes sufficiently worn as to cause the projectile no longer to take an accurate flight, but in extreme cases to tumble and instead of revolving to go head over, and when the gun has reached that condition its usefulness has practically disappeared, so that in fixing for the insular possessions and Panama the amount of reserve ammunition equal to the accuracy life of a gun the board has taken the maximum position, and I believe in view of what we now know they have wisely done so. That means an increase of something like 150 per cent over the former estimate for the insular possessions and Panama, and you will recollect that that was for the two-hours' supply.

In the continental United States on the first line—the outer line—for the large guns, 8-inch and above, the allowance is just one-half of that, and the reason for that is plain also. If war starts we will not be able to supplement, presumably, the supply of ammunition for either the insular possessions or the Panama Canal. Certainly we ought not to put ourselves in a position where we might need to add to that supply, but in the case of the United States there will always be opportunity to transfer ammunition, and presumably there will be opportunity to increase the supply by manufacture and otherwise in case of a long-sustained war.

For the second line of defense the board fixed one-half of what it fixed for the outer line, and these recommendations are believed by all now to represent a proper and adequate supply. The estimates, in consequence, in connection with the ammunition for the seacoast cannon, have greatly increased. I stated last year that I believed then, and very candidly said so to this committee, that the weakest point perhaps in the bill that was then presented was the provision in regard to the seacoast cannon, a provision which had been the usual provision for many years past, of $200,000. And I stated that the Fortification Committee had not felt warranted in increasing that amount because that had been all that had then been estimated for, but we stated the facts, and if the committee of the whole saw fit to increase the sum they might do so.

The committee, however, did not do so, and the amount remained there. We had on supply at that time for continental United States about 73 per cent for guns and mortars of the supply deemed requisite under the old standard, and the $200,000 served to increase that percentage 1 or 2 per cent. The reserve for the guns was somewhat larger than for the mortars. For the insular possessions the reserve was nearly that then deemed requisite. The estimate this year for seacoast-cannon ammunition for continental United States is $3,000,000, with a contract authorization of $3,500,000 additional. In other words, instead of the allowance of $200,000 for ammunition, we are recommending an allowance of $6,500,000. For the insular possessions, the estimate is $1,700,000 of cash and $500,000 of authorization. And upon the basis that we are going, we will complete in about four years, certainly in five, the total supply for all of the guns mounted and to be mounted under the scheme as it has been revised by the board of review. These figures are large, but that the committee was justified in recommending in its entirety the estimates submitted in this regard I do not believe anyone conversant with the recent facts will question.

Mr. REILLY. That makes the total of $24,000,000 of powder on hand for the coast defenses?

Mr. SHERLEY. Powder constitutes only about 10 per cent of the cost of the ammunition.

Mr. REILLY. I mean ammunition.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not state from memory, though I have it somewhere, the exact quantity in money value of the ammunition that it is contemplated to have as a reserve. I may be able to find it.

Mr. REILLY. And that means $24,000,000 of ammunition as a reserve?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would mean about that, because we have already a considerable quantity. This $8,700,000 will more than complete what was formerly considered an adequate supply, but, of course, it would not carry it toward a completion of the new supply deemed requisite. I find we now have in money value $15,618,000 of reserve ammunition, not counting the value of the reserve for Panama.

Something was said a few moments ago in the way of an interrogation by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] touching mobile guns for use in seacoast defense. The committee had submitted to it an estimate for the building of a 14-inch gun, to be mounted on a railroad car, capable of being moved on the railroads of the country, and fired either from bases prepared for it, or, if experiments shall prove successful, by a lock device on the rails, at any suitable point. Estimates were also submitted for six howitzers that should be placed upon railroad cars and used as a mobile defense to protect the areas not now protected, where a landing might be threatened, and, if need be, to supplement existing fortifications.

The committee allowed the estimate for the gun and an amount sufficient for one of the mortars. We did not make provision for six of them, because this matter is in an experimental stage, and we believed that it was well to have the designs actually completed and the gun and mortar built before undertaking any great number of those types. If the hopes and beliefs of the Ordnance Department prove true, we will have created a very valuable adjunct to the seacoast defense of America. They will not take the place of any fixed fortifications, because fixed fortifications, if they are properly placed, are located where they are so important strategically—or because of what they protect—as to never make it wise to leave such places undefended and subject simply to the defense that would come by moving mobile guns that might or might not get there in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed until he concludes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may proceed until he concludes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. May I interrupt the gentleman at that point?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LINTHICUM. This letter I have received is not exactly in line with the car you mentioned. I would like to read it, because I think we ought to know the accuracy of this statement. It is from a very reputable citizen of Baltimore, Mr. W. M. McCormick, and dated June 9, 1916. He says:

> While talking with the president of a large railroad a few days ago he told me that last year there were 256,000 cars built, but that not one single car was built that would carry one of the big guns that are being used as a sort of side show in Germany to-day, and that there is only one car owned by a private corporation that is strong enough and big enough to carry ammunition of first-class power. I asked him how long it would take to build cars that would be needed immediately, in the event of hostilities, and he replied that it certainly could not be done in less than a year.

I think it is a very strong statement, and the gentleman being well informed, I would like to ask him about the accuracy of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would say that part of it is accurate and part of it is quite inaccurate. I have not undertaken to investigate that particular subject and so I speak from general knowledge. It is manifestly inaccurate as to ammunition. It is true that there is no car now of size sufficient to carry one of the proposed new 16-inch guns, and we are providing in the sundry civil bill, as I recall, for the building of one of those cars, though there is no need of one of those cars either, except for the occasional moving of a gun of that kind to Sandy Hook, where it is to be tested, and from there to the place where it is to be placed permanently.

Now, touching the mobile artillery for coast defense that I speak of, it is contemplated to build a car with a gun permanently mounted upon it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I understand that.

Mr. SHERLEY. And the problem then comes to so arrange the locking of that car as to stand the stress that would come from the fire of the mortar or of the gun; more particularly in the case of the gun, because with the mortar the reaction or recoil is mostly downward and less difficult to take care of. The problem before the Ordnance Department is to work out that particular device. That they will succeed I have no reasonable doubt. When they shall have done so I believe it will be proper to supply in considerable number such mobile guns and mortars.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I think everybody who is not an expert has been impressed by the use of the large guns by Germany. Those guns must be easily transported from place to place. How large are they? What is their range? Would they be of any use in coast defense?

Mr. SHERLEY. As seacoast defenses the particular guns the gentleman has in mind would not be of any use and would not be used. I had intended a little later, when we come to the question of mobile artillery, to discuss the big guns.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to wait, then.

Mr. SHERLEY. But I will say this, that the problems confronting the Germans and which prompted them to use those guns in their land attacks are very different from the problems that would confront us here in America. They used those guns in order to destroy land fortifications—land fortifications that had been built to withstand the attack of guns not in excess perhaps of 7 inches. They brought presumably guns of 11 inches or larger, and with a sufficient fire to cause the projectile to absolutely demolish the armament and concrete of those land fortifications. There are no land fortifications in America. There could none be built in America without our having early advance knowledge of that fact, and in the absence of them the particular need of the kind of big guns that Germany used in the reduction of the forts in the early history of the war would not exist here.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said these big German guns would be of no use in seacoast defense?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. The reason for that is this: They are guns of not any great range. I speak now, of course, with limited knowledge, because the information we get is not full and is not always without conflict. But most of those guns are not guns of very great range. They certainly would not be guns comparable in power to the 14-inch and 16-inch guns that we have in our seacoast defenses, and they are built for a different purpose.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. SHERLEY. In a moment. Now they have also used large guns for another purpose in the European war. After the war there ceased to be mobile and degenerated into trench warfare, it was found necessary to do something more than to use the 3-inch and other small guns which are admirably adapted for clearing the terrain and cutting the barbed wire entanglements and those things, but were not sufficient to absolutely dig out and destroy the men who had dug themselves into deep earth trenches, so that both sides have been using guns of considerably larger caliber than was originally thought, at least by France, to be necessary in order to absolutely destroy and obliterate these trenches.

Now, it is believed that guns not in excess perhaps of 9 inches and firing a projectile of something over 400 pounds would be necessary for that purpose. The gentlemen who are interested in the subject will find a very interesting statement by Gen. Crozier on that phase, and also some extracts from one of the English writers touching the use by the Germans of larger guns than the allies, and how it came about, and the reason why the allies were not supplied with guns of that size. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The record shows that at Dunkirk the Germans did fire at a greater range than 20,000 yards.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be. They probably took some of their seacoast cannon or navy guns and mounted them there.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That shows, then, that it is possible to move these large cannon.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course it is possible. I have not denied that. But these heavy guns at Dunkirk, of which the gentleman speaks, were not mobile guns, I think. I may be mistaken in this, but that is my impression.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman think from his investigations of this subject that fixed firing now is as valuable as a means of defense if the large cannon could be moved after the location has once been ascertained by the enemy? Has not the experience of Europe rather shown that the ability to move the cannon is immense value as a means of defense?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is nothing that has happened in Europe anywhere at any time in this war that in my judgment serves in the slightest degree to question the wisdom of the character of the fixed fortifications of America. The purposes that they serve are entirely foreign. The only comparison that would be of value would be something to test the fortifications at Helgoland, and if there be any proof needed of the value of fortifications in order to protect given areas and to give to your fleet a freedom that it would not otherwise have, it is the fortifications that Germany has placed there, and which have enabled her fleet to ride in security under the protection of those guns and to use that protected water as a base to go back and forth from in her fights.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But the gentleman knows that no nation knows the location, number, size, caliber, or character of those guns.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I know. But those guns are guns whose purpose is similar to the purpose to be subserved by the fortifications.

Now, the gentleman is quite right in the appreciation of the value that comes of heavy mobile armament. It has its place. The internal-combustion engine has revolutionized field artillery in that regard. It has made possible the movement by traction of guns of a caliber that would not have been possible in the old days; and we ought to have those guns, not necessarily of the same size, but of sufficient size, because a gun that is bigger than the job that confronts it is a handicap to the extent that it is bigger.

But we ought to have guns of larger size than we now have for our mobile Army, and we are preparing to get them. If we can successfully mount these 14-inch guns and these 16-inch mortars upon railroad carriages, we will have added tremendously to the value of our fortifications; but in the judgment of those who, I think, are best qualified to judge, we will not have done away with the need for the fixed fortifications.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman has told us about the provision for additional ammunition and shells. Is it the intention to manufacture the same sort of projectile that we are now using for the coast-defense guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. We are using now for seacoast guns two kinds of projectiles, a shot and a shell; one of them intended for the piercing of primary armament, and therefore containing a heavier casing and a less amount of explosive, so as to enable it to penetrate the armor before it explodes, the other containing a larger amount of explosive and not capable of penetrating such heavy armor, but which will bite into armor sufficiently as that when it explodes it will do damage to secondary armor. The Navy uses a projectile that is somewhere in between those two. I may say in passing that I do not believe there is any serious question in the minds of any of the officers as to the absolute efficiency, for the purpose intended, of the kind of projectiles that we use.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. One other question. The gentleman knows that the War College has published a summary or epitome of the latest lessons learned from the European war, and one of their statements is that high-angle fire and high-explosive shells are absolutely essential to the most effective use of heavy cannon. Can the gentleman tell us the amount of high explosive that is contained in our 12-inch shell, the highest explosive shell that we have to-day?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not tell the gentleman from memory; but the gentleman must not confuse the value of a particular kind of shell for use against infantry and land forces and the kind of shell for use against battleships. The primary purpose of a seacoast fortification is to shoot at a battleship; and while it is true that we are arranging, by all-around fire, to enable these guns to help in their own defense against a land attack, and while it is true that they will be used to fire shot and shell at troops in the field, yet the character of shot and shell which we have provided for them in the past is the kind that in my judgment ought to have been provided, and I do not think anything has been stated by the War College or anybody else, except by Mr. Isham and by Mr. Gathmann, which calls that in question. We doubtless shall also provide some ammunition for these guns against mobile troops.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Can the gentleman state whether or not the high-explosive shells used by the German, the English, the French, and the Japanese Navies for firing at enemy battleships carry a great deal heavier charge of high explosive than any of the shells that we have to fire from our 12-inch guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not speak from my own knowledge, but my impression is that they do not. I do not really know, because I have not had occasion to know; and frankly the gentleman must not expect me to be able to carry all these things in my head. Let me say in passing that I do not think my opinion is worth the snap of my finger—though I have given seven years of the hardest study to this question—compared with the opinion of Army and Navy officers on these matters; and I know of no more dangerous thing than for Members of Congress with a limited study of the subject to put their judgment touching the technique—not the broad policy, for that is our proper field—but touching the technique of this subject against that of the men who have made a lifetime study of it. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Coming back to the question of cars to transport these big guns, does not the gentleman think it would be wise in case of emergency, or a desire to move any of these guns to another place, to have such cars on which to carry them?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, yes. If the gentleman wants me to go afield, I think there are a great many things that we ought to do, that are not within my purview or the purview of this bill. I think some of the railroads ought to be provided with facilities for the rapid embarking and disembarking of troops. None of them are so provided. But manifestly, if I undertook to cover all these questions, I should be speaking all day.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman said he did not think there was any likelihood of our being attacked on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts both at the same time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I did not say anything of the kind. I said that the original conception, the original basis for the position that had been taken touching a one-hour supply of ammunition for seacoast guns in continental United States was the idea that we would not be attacked on both coasts at once. That is a very different thing. I think there might be conditions under which we might be attacked on both coasts at once.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Taking that as a fact, does not the gentleman think it might be well to have these cars constructed so as to be able to carry some guns from one coast to the other?

Mr. SHERLEY. That and many other things might be desirable.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Is it or is it not a fact that most of the vessels sunk by mines, torpedoes, and submarines have been sunk not by armor-piercing but by explosive shells?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and it is also very important to remember the fact that they have been hit below the armor belt, both by the submarine and by the mine.

Mr. HARDY. Does not the gentleman think that explosive shells have caused more destruction in this war than armor-piercing shells?

Mr. SHERLEY. Frankly, stating simply my own opinion, coupled with the premise that I think my opinion does not amount to anything, I have read a good deal, and I have heard statements made by the claimants, Mr. Isham and others, concerning high explosive shells; but I have seen nothing——

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman has seen the reports of the destruction accomplished by the submarines.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have seen nothing in the way of tests or actual developments abroad to warrant the belief that a high explosive shell, which depends for its effect upon the racking produced by the explosion the moment it hits the outside of the ship, is at all comparable in effectiveness to that produced by an armor-piercing shell. But I had rather not delay consideration of the bill. We might argue the matter for a week.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman remember an experiment or test that was had under the supervision of the Navy Department of an attempt to explode one of these shells in close proximity to a 75-foot caisson about a year ago?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not remember a particular test. I heard some gentlemen talking in the cloakroom about what they had seen. But I am not willing to believe that officers in the Army and the Navy, conscientious and patriotic men, whom I know know more than we do about the matter, have deliberately, treasonably—for that is what it would amount to—turned down these things simply because they did not want to admit that their theory held in the past was wrong.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman raised the question of the propriety of Members of Congress——

Mr. SHERLEY. I only express my own personal opinion.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. By whose motion was it that the bill provides for only one mobile heavy cannon among all the cannon for the defense of our Government on both coasts? Was that by action of the committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In face of all the experiments and information that we have derived from modern warfare in Europe?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman fails to distinguish between the criticism that I made of Congress dealing in matters that they knew nothing about and what the committee has done in this instance. I do not undertake to say that a particular type of gun may not be built or should not be built. The only judgment that was exercised by the committee in that instance was in allowing enough money for one of these guns instead of six. We may not have been wise in that regard. That did not involve anything more than this determination that inasmuch as it was stated by these gentlemen that this was still in the experimental stage, in the sense that they had not worked out in detail all of their scheme, instead of building six it might be wise to build one and then the defects that would necessarily appear in a brand new thing might be corrected in the 5 or 50 we should build.

If the gentleman thinks that that is the same exercise of judgment as undertaking to pass on the technical question of how much explosive should be put in a shell, the gentleman is welcome to that view. I do not say that in any disagreeable sense, and I hope the gentleman will so understand it. Every man has his own idea of what he can do.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Was not the 16-inch gun which is now at Panama moved from Troy, N. Y., to New York?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true.

Now, the committee had very exhaustive hearings touching another matter that I trust the membership of this House has read in some detail. We had presented to us an invention by John Hays Hammond, jr., for the radio control of a torpedo. It was recommended very strongly by the Board of Ordnance and Fortification. It has undertaken very elaborate tests. If what is claimed for it be true, it is a most remarkable invention. Its possibilities are very great. The committee conducted hearings covering nearly 200 pages that are most elaborate in detail. They not only embraced the views of Army officers, who had actually witnessed some of the experiments, and wireless experts of the Army, but they also represented the views of a number of officers of the Navy who, while they had not examined into the invention in detail, had at a suggestion of mine met informally before testifying before the committee, in a conference with the Army officers touching the matter, also with Mr. Hammond, so that the claims of Mr. Hammond and Army officers might be brought fully to their attention. They testified to the invention from the naval standpoint.

All of the Army officers who testified testified very strongly in favor of acquiring the invention. They stated that it had always been the desire by the students of seacoast defense to have a mobile offensive weapon, because manifestly the guns on shore can only be used when the enemy comes within their range. The mine fields can only be of value when the enemy invades the field, whereas if they could obtain a weapon that could be used offensively it would be of tremendous value, and that many experiments had been made in that regard. They believed that Mr. Hammond had successfully solved this basic proposition, the control by wireless energy without interference of a boat carrying a torpedo or high explosive which could be used in certain restricted areas with very great effect, and in even greater areas with considerable effect.

Some question was raised, however, in the hearings as to whether assuming control of the torpedo by a person on shore the vision of the person on shore would be sufficiently accurate touching the course of the torpedo and of the target as to enable him to accurately direct the torpedo. In other words, admitting that the control is absolute, whether from the shore you did not get a situation where the relationship of the torpedo to the target from the viewpoint of the man on shore controlling it was not such as to make it impossible to accurately direct the torpedo.

Some doubt was expressed by Admiral Benson, of the Navy, in that regard, and there was some question by one other officer of the Navy. There was, however, by the other officers of the Navy who testified considerable belief in and enthusiasm shown for the invention. It is believed by Mr. Hammond that he can not only control this torpedo from the shore and pass that control from one station to another, but that by the installation of wireless apparatus upon an aeroplane it will be possible to control that torpedo from the aeroplane. He has, as he believes, and as those who witnessed the experiment believe, successfully simulated the condition that would actually exist over what would be a distance of a mile. There seems no fundamental reason why that control could not be extended over a distance of some 6 miles from an aeroplane.

Mr. LEWIS. What was the size of a target at the distance of a mile?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, the target did not enter into it at all. What I was speaking of was the control from a distance from an aeroplane over a torpedo. The question involved there is the question of the amount of energy which can be sent out from the aeroplane, and that is dependent upon the weight-carrying capacity of the aeroplane. There is no reason why an aeroplane can not now be constructed with sufficient weight-carrying capacity to have installed in it a wireless apparatus that would be able to send the necessary energy so as to control this torpedo at a distance of 5 or 6 miles.

If that could be done, the extent to which the torpedo could be used would be very great. Instead of being confined by shore vision, as you would be if the control came from shore batteries, you would be able by following over the torpedo to go over a radius of many miles and control the torpedo from a height sufficient to put the aeroplane beyond danger of serious attack by anti-aircraft guns of an enemy fleet. It would have an added value in not only the ability to better observe the course both of the torpedo and of the target, because looking down from above there would be none of that difficulty touching the angles of which I spoke a moment ago that might present itself to a man looking from the shore out at a torpedo and target that was in somewhat the same line. But it would also enable it to be used in time of fog. In time of fog it is impossible from the shore to see any distance out, but usually a fog is a very thin layer of air, and by looking down you can see through it when it would not be possible to see from the shore at all.

The hearings in some respects make one believe he is in the days of black magic. Men testified as to what was done that made it seem as if one were in dreamland rather than in actuality.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In a moment. It was shown that they could take this torpedo and control it from the shore so as to hit a bamboo stick that had a weight attached to one end of it to make it float upright, at a distance of three and four miles, that they could sail up to a passing schooner and come right up to it and could have hit it and then turn and circle around it and come back, and that the control was absolute. It was testified that there was a system of lights by which the directions of the torpedo could be absolutely controlled in the nighttime, that the torpedo could have upon it a searchlight that could be illuminated and put out instantaneously and a beam of light from it would remain horizontal without regard to the pitching and tumbling of the ship. It was testified that by a certain use of the gyroscope a ship could be put upon a given course and would automatically keep that course and when it got off come back onto it again. We went as thoroughly into the question as it is possible for laymen not familiar with a new and intricate science to go.

The secret whereby Mr. Hammond obtains control of the torpedo without the possibility of interference was explained to the committee, but it was not printed because manifestly it ought not to be, being a secret of Mr. Hammond, but as a result of the testimony and the very insistent urging on the part of the War Department the committee felt that it would have been derelict in its duty and subject to severe censure if it did not make provision for acquiring this invention, if its claims were anything like borne out in actual trial. Inasmuch as the Navy has made some criticism of it, however, the committee made its recommendation for the payment of the very considerable sum of $750,000 to Mr. Hammond for acquiring the exclusive right to this invention upon the condition that there first be a demonstration before a joint board of Army and Navy officers to be appointed by the President, and that the money should not be expended unless the report of that joint board is favorable to the device. To have done less than that, I repeat, would have left the committee subject to the just criticism of the country and of the Congress. I think that we have safeguarded it by providing for this additional test in the face of what is the overwhelming testimony, if you consider the weight of testimony in favor of the device.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Possibly the gentleman has practically covered the first question I desire to ask. What I want to know is just what is this control by which they start the torpedo going and move it as they please?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can explain somewhat in detail. You may use either what they call a sea sled, which is a boat riding on the surface of the water and which gains great speed, and depend upon its speed to render it invulnerable from gunfire of the ship, or you can use a boat like a submarine which is awash, which is running with its vitals under the water but with the top exposed. In the boat is carried the torpedo, which can be fired from it at any moment; and there is also carried, if need be, a large amount of explosives so that if the torpedo fails to hit, the actual boat itself could be run into the target and an explosion had. There is an internal-combustion engine, a gasoline engine, which supplies the motive power to the boat. The boat could be built of any reasonable size and could have a radius of activity commensurate with the amount of fuel, gasoline, that it carries. It has a receiving wireless set so arranged with the mechanism of the engine and of the rudder, or the guiding mechanism of the boat, as to enable a person from the shore to send wireless energy to the boat, and start, stop, reverse, accelerate, or slow-down the engine, turn the steering apparatus so as to make the boat turn to right or left, go forward or back, and what not.

Now that itself would not necessarily be a difficult thing, although the refinement with which he has worked it out is. This thing is no longer within the domain of theory; the actual details have been worked out. There has been any number of instances in which control could be sent by wireless to a mechanism whereby a boat might be moved, but the fundamental part of Mr. Hammond's invention, as I understand it, lies in the fact that he has such a system as enables him to send this wireless energy without the ability of anyone to interfere with the sending or the receiving of it, and the way that is done constitutes the fundamental secret of his invention.

Now, the invention, it is claimed, goes so far that it is impossible in any way by other wireless waves to interfere with the energy sent out to this boat short of a thousand feet of the source from which the hostile energy is sent, and that if there is an interference at that point the boat will automatically turn and go toward the source of the interference.

If at any moment the control over the boat be interfered with or the mechanism be destroyed by virtue of gunfire, it automatically locks and continues upon the course that it had at the time at which the control was interfered with; that with an attempted interference whereby in any way one of the unit wave lengths that go to make up the combination should be discovered and duplicated by hostile energy the effect of that would not be to interfere with the combination, but simply to help it along, because it would help to supply the energy for one of the units and would not have destroyed the combination which is necessary for real interference.

I think if gentlemen, just as a matter of interest, will read the hearing they will be tremendously impressed. The committee was unanimous; there was no doubt in the minds of any of them that this invention was so remarkable as to warrant us in going forward and I think I violate no confidence of the committee when I say that a number of the Members of the committee were willing to recommend a direct appropriation now without requiring this additional test.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I simply wanted to say to the gentleman that Mr. Hammond had a yacht at Baltimore in the harbor there and was steering it about and sending it wherever he pleased in the harbor just in the manner the gentleman has said, and I was very much impressed with it and I am very glad to hear that the committee had this matter before them.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman state along what line or basis was the amount of $700,000 fixed as a fair price for this invention?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will do so. The first proposal that was made by Mr. Hammond contemplated the sale of the exclusive right to the invention, if I recollect, for $530,000, with the payment of a royalty of $10,000 on each torpedo that was built, and a 10 per cent commission upon the investment that should be made in the shore stations.

The reason for the latter 10 per cent commission was that he would have to operate and supervise and install these units. He did not desire to undertake to make a profit out of the Government by selling the material itself at a profit, and so he thought that a legitimate compensation should come to him by paying him the 10 per cent on the amount that was expended in the building and installing of the units and then a royalty of 10 per cent upon each torpedo. He stated that he had expended some $300,000 in the development of this invention, in the experimentation and in the conducting of this work over a number of years. He then made the proposition to the committee that he would sell to the United States simply the rights here, leaving him free to sell the rights abroad.

The committee was unanimous in the belief that if the thing was worth acquiring it was worth acquiring in its entirety, and that we ought to get the exclusive right and not leave it to be sold to possible enemies, and I think it is due to Mr. Hammond to say that he has all along shown a desire that his country should possess what he believes to be this very valuable weapon, and he has refrained from availing himself of perhaps the most unusual market that will ever present itself to an inventor, the market abroad brought about by virtue of the European war, in order to give to his own country opportunity of acquiring it.

Mr. Hammond in his entire bearing and dealing with the committee exhibited a desire to serve his country and a consideration that I think was admirable, and I think it is due him to state it here. The committee being of the opinion that we ought, if we acquired it at all, to acquire the exclusive right also came to this opinion: That it was more desirable to buy the thing outright and have done with the question of royalties than to buy with a less first payment and then to continue royalties.

For instance, if the device should prove a success it was not at all improbable that a hundred or more of these torpedoes would be used. That would represent $1,000,000 in itself in royalties, and his original proposal contemplated that we must order within a period of three years, which he then afterwards agreed to extend to six years, at least three units, each unit comprising 10 torpedoes, which I think made additional in royalties something like $300,000, so we would have been obligated under his first terms to have paid $830,000.

The committee authorized myself, as chairman, to take up, with Mr. Hammond, the question of a proposal that would embrace the complete purchase of all of his rights.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment. And as a result of that he made a proposal to the War Department by which he agreed to sell us his entire right for the sum of $750,000. If the invention is worth while that is by no means too much; it is considerably less than his original proposition. If the invention is not worth while, we ought to find out by this test.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for just one question? How much of his time or attention or supervision does he stipulate he will give if we put this into operation?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is all provided in the contract, whereby he agrees to give his services free of charge in the installing of one unit and to acquaint such officers as we may designate with all the knowledge that he possesses, to give us the advantage of any additional inventions he may make in the perfection and refinement of his invention, and after that he holds himself subject to the command of the United States Government at a per diem for the days that he may be employed in any supervision, and so forth. The details of the matter have been very carefully gone into, and I have here—it would take some time to read it, but I will when the item is met, if necessary—the contract that has been tentatively agreed upon.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. As I understand, the operation of this system requires a high-power wireless station at the particular place where the torpedo is to be operated?

Mr. SHERLEY. The system contemplates a shore station. I am not now speaking of the later development by virtue of control by the aeroplane. I mean a shore station from which the wireless energy will be sent out. That shore station could be connected, and would be, with any number of observation points. The only connection that would be necessary would be a field telephone, whereby an observer would be able to direct control of the torpedo by sending back to the main station from which the wireless energy went the information necessary, and simply by a system very much like the ordinary keyboard for a telephone that information could be passed on to observers at different places, so that if the target and the torpedo went out of the range of a particular observer it might be possible to transfer the control to another observer, and so carry it on over a distance greater than that which would be possible by the use of but one observer.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It would not require, then, the erection of a great number of these wireless stations along the seacoast? Might it not be operated by those we already have?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no. It would require at each place where they expected to use them the erection of one of these stations. It is having the mechanism whereby you send the energy in such form as to control the torpedo and prevent the interference with that control that is necessary.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Are some of our other seaports, like New York and Boston, now supplied with wireless stations that could be put in operation soon?

Mr. SHERLEY. Practically all of our fortifications have wireless stations, but having them or not having them would not have anything to do with installing or accelerating the working of this system.

Mr. REILLY. What is the shore-distance control by wireless stations?

Mr. SHERLEY. You mean what distance from shore you could control this torpedo?

Mr. REILLY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is simply determined by range of sight. There is no——

Mr. REILLY. What is the limitation of sight?

Mr. SHERLEY. That would depend on the climatic conditions, on the elevation of the observer from the shore line, and so forth. I should say, broadly speaking, somewhere between 5 and 6, 7, or perhaps 8 miles.

Mr. REILLY. And unless you could develop the aeroplane control what good would that be to battleships?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would be a good thing in many places where there are runbys, and where the fleet could come that close in, and it would have the advantage of supplementing very much the mine fields. It could be used very effectively in mining, and it would simply be an additional weapon in this area.

Mr. REILLY. But how would it be of any use if the fleet would not come any closer than 8 or 10 miles to our coast, as you have said.

Mr. SHERLEY. I disagree with you. There are unquestionably cases when they would come closer.

Mr. REILLY. On your own theory they could not.

Mr. SHERLEY. The theory on which we proceeded was that it was always well to supplement a good weapon with another one.

Mr. REILLY. This weapon from shore does not give you any more control than you have now from your own batteries.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; it does. It is a very different proposition. By the use of a torpedo or a gun you fire and either hit or miss. The moment the shot is fired your control of it has passed away, whereas the virtue of this lies in the fact that you have control of it practically up to the moment when you hit the target. And if your original direction is wrong, you can redirect it and you can continue so to do.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand, the bill provides that this invention shall be patented for the benefit of the United States?

Mr. SHERLEY. That raises another phase of the matter. The gentleman refers to the provision which authorizes the transfer to the Government of the applications for patent, so that the patents may be taken out in the name of the United States if desirable. In point of fact, what I think should be the policy to be pursued would be in regard to the fundamental patents, the secret of which is desired to be kept, is that the matter should never be pressed beyond the application stage, because up to that point it would remain in the secret archives of the Patent Office. After that it would be public, and of course the knowledge that came thereby would be availed of by others.

Mr. BLACK. By other nations?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. That was the point I was getting at.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think this ought to be stated in connection with the matter, now that I am on it: I have received a number of letters from Mr. De Forest, who is, I understand, a wireless expert, who believes that we are not warranted in spending this money at all, and who claims that the inventions of Mr. Hammond are not novel, and that the system is not worth the money. I am not going to impugn the motives of Mr. De Forest, because I have never seen him, and I have no personal knowledge that would warrant me in doing so. But I have taken occasion to have the question of the value of the patents of Mr. Hammond gone over by the attorney for the War Department and one of the patent experts of the Government, and they believe that he has certain patents that are fundamentally of value.

The original patent that Mr. De Forest refers to, that was taken out by Admiral Fiske, although the patent was issued, I think, in the name of the Western Electric Co., will expire in less than 16 months, so that if it was at all basic, so as to give a claim for interference on the part of Mr. Hammond, that claim would disappear in 16 months. There are certain other patents that he alleges—I believe, although I am not positive and recall it only from memory, because I am not a patent lawyer and have no knowledge of those patents as such—that are prior to the Hammond applications. Mr. Hammond has applications for patents to the number of over one hundred. The attorney for the War Department and the Patent Office expert advised me that they believed Mr. Hammond's claims are substantial. He has not taken them to patent for the reasons I have stated. To do so would be to give the knowledge that the patent would give to anyone else.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SHERLEY. In just one moment. To my own mind I do not think it is very material whether there is basis for an exclusive patent to Mr. Hammond or not. Sooner or later this secret will become known. No great invention remains secret long. But in the meanwhile we have the start by a good many years of anyone else, apparently, because we have not simply a patent in the ordinary sense, but we have absolutely worked out the details of each part of the mechanism. The thing has been built and actually done.

Now I believe if I were to show it to a man, it would take him a number of years—and that was testified to by several gentlemen—before he could duplicate it so as to make it work satisfactorily. But Mr. Hammond in his contract agrees to hold the Government harmless of any claim of infringement, and he is financially responsible and so is the company, and I think that in every way the financial end of it could be safeguarded; it has been.

I took occasion to go over very carefully the contracts, and, with what little knowledge of law I had, suggested things that I thought would help to preserve the Government's rights, and I insisted upon the law department of the War Department passing upon it all, because I did not want to take the responsibility of acting as attorney for the Government in the matter. I believe an examination of the contracts will show that we have tied Mr. Hammond pretty tightly.

Mr. BLACK. Now if Mr. Hammond should elect to do so, would there be anything to prevent him from having this thing patented, say, in England, or Germany, or France?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, there would be this: He has already made certain applications for patents there, and under the terms of the contract he has to assign all his rights, not only in America, but everywhere else.

Mr. BLACK. It includes all the applications he has made?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Under the contract he will give the United States Government every right to the patent now owned by him and his company that he has incorporated, and the stock is almost entirely, if not entirely, owned by Mr. Hammond, his father, and his brother.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that if this sale is consummated the contract will be prepared by the Department of Justice?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The contract has been prepared by the attorney for the War Department, the Judge Advocate General. It is in the way of a signed proposal.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It has been prepared, then, as I understand, by the proper legal authorities?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true, and it is in writing; and Mr. Hammond has given the option to the Government, to be exercised a given number of days after the experiment has been had, touching the practicability of the invention.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not true that these applications that Mr. Hammond has pending with these foreign governments disclose the same secret of his invention as they would disclose in our own Patent Office?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, except Mr. Hammond was wise enough not to make application on the fundamental aspects of his invention, but only as to certain minor features of the invention in connection with certain parts of the machinery.

Mr. BLACK. Then these applications do not refer to the basic control of the torpedoes without interference?

Mr. SHERLEY. Those that they have filed abroad do not.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky has concluded his instructive and illuminating remarks about this invention, there is one burning question that I would like to ask him. I want to know if Mr. Hammond or anybody else could be persuaded by any means to invent or devise a method by which the baseball pitchers could get better control of the ball. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. It was testified informally in the hearings that the discoveries were such that you might send a message by wireless to France and have it received and mechanically written out upon a typewriter there, and someone suggested the machine might also translate it and write it out in French if it was sent in English. [Laughter.]

Seriously, the development that has taken place in wireless is so remarkable that he is a brave man who undertakes to put a limit upon the possibility that this has opened up in the world of science and achievement.

Mr. KELLEY. How old is this young man?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Hammond is now 27 or 28.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If Mr. Hammond makes this contract with the United States Government and afterwards makes discoveries and improvements under that, would his discoveries and improvements be included in the contract you have with him?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is in the contract. The contract provides that any refinement and development of the invention should be given without expense to the Government.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am glad that that is so, because I have known of cases along that line.

Mr. SHERLEY. I should be glad to put the actual contracts into the RECORD. I think the reading of it will show that we have very carefully safeguarded all of the interests of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. On page 5 of the report the statement is made that it is not proper to state in detail the proposals made in reference to the additional armament. Can the gentleman state, or would it be proper for him to state, at what point these increases in guns and disappearing gun carriages are to be made?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will find on the top of page 5 of the report this statement:

> An additional sum will be necessary for the fortification of places that will doubtless need be fortified within a few years but for which no definite scheme has been recommended, these latter fortifications being largely for Alaska, Guam, and Guantanamo. The board's report contemplates additional fortifications at Portland, Boston, New Bedford, eastern entrance to Long Island Sound, Sandy Hook, including Rockaway Beach, Delaware Bay, Cape Henry, Charleston, Pensacola, New Orleans, Galveston, San Francisco, Columbia River, Puget Sound in continental United States, in Hawaii, the Philippines, and at the Panama Canal.

Now supplementing that it is proper to say that in this bill we are making provisions for emplacing two 12-inch guns mounted for a high-angle fire at Boston, four at New York, and one at San Francisco. We are also making provision for the building of 17 of these carriages because that takes longer than to build the emplacements. Next year we will unquestionably, in my judgment, carry provision for the emplacement of the other 10 of these guns. We are also providing for carrying on the work of the fortification at Cape Henry as rapidly as possible, giving all the money that can properly be expended there. We are finishing the fortifications at Los Angeles and San Pedro, and we are providing for the acquisition of land at Rockaway Beach.

If that land is acquired in time there will be enough of a fund for the engineers to enable them to start on some of the emplacement work there. The gentleman will understand that the items in the fortification bill are carried in terms of the purpose to be served rather than by any designation of locality. We carry so much money for emplacements which is spent by the engineers, so much money for armament which is spent by the ordnance people, and so much for fire control. There is always an understanding between the committee and the various departments as to where the money is to be expended, and they do not violate that understanding. There is no restriction, however, in point of law, and there have been instances where circumstances arose which made it proper to use the money for a purpose not originally stated, or instead of the purpose it was appropriated for, but they usually made an informal request of Members in charge of the bill, and it has been acquiesced in.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state whether the acquirement of land for aviation stations is a proper subject for consideration under this bill, or whether that comes under the military bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think we would have jurisdiction of that matter. There was a time when the fortification bill carried or failed to carry estimates submitted to the committee touching balloons and perhaps aeroplanes, but in recent years I think the Army bill has carried that.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman state what provision is made for the fort at Cape Henry.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; I can state that we have made provisions to supply them with all of the money to erect fortifications there that they can possibly expend between now and the next bill. I can even enumerate if the gentleman wants the number of guns.

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; I do not want that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to say in passing that I sometimes question the wisdom of the detail with which we make public what we are doing in connection with fixed fortifications. I have in my possession information telling me of every gun, its caliber and its location in the United States and in every possession of the United States. The committee always has that information before it. We can give it, of course, to the House; but I have always felt that I should not do more in that respect than was necessary, so that I hope if at times I seem to hesitate to reply to gentlemen's questions they will appreciate that it is not done with the idea of being discourteous to them, but because some of these matters ought not to go into the RECORD.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman in the view that he has expressed, and I was just about to ask a question to bring that out.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have detained the Committee much too long, but I want to speak very briefly of the remaining phase of the fortifications bill.

This bill deals not alone with the question of seacoast defenses, but it makes provision for the mobile army of the United States. In it are provided the guns and the ammunition for all of the regular and volunteer forces of the United States. Similar items carried in the Army bill make provision for the militia of the United States.

This year we had submitted to us very great increases of appropriations for field artillery and the ammunition therefor. For a number of years past we have been increasing the allowances for both guns and ammunition. When I first became chairman of the subcommittee the annual appropriation for ammunition for field artillery amounted to about $150,000. The Committee increased it to $300,000, then to $600,000, then to $900,000, then to $1,200,000. Last year it was something over that, and this year we provide for $2,800,000 in cash, and $1,500,000 of authorized contracts. Gentlemen will see by this that in recent years we have gone very much faster than in the past. I believe there was not any place where we were as backward and as weak as we were in regard to this item. A few years ago the number of guns and the ammunition provided for them were so totally inadequate as to be surprising. Yet I would be unfair if I did not say that in the old days I did not appreciate in anything like the degree that I do now how far behind we were.

As I said awhile ago, the one thing that is a daily surprise is the amount of guns and ammunition that are being used in the European war, and I know of no more pathetic speech that has ever been made by a great man in a great crisis in the world's history than the "too late" speech of Lloyd George, in which he speaks of the total inability of the allies, particularly of the English, to supply the guns and ammunition that had been requisite, how on every battlefield of Europe the specter of "too late" had dogged the footsteps of the allied soldiers.

No matter how much men may fear a great army and the effect that it would have upon the habits, purposes, and thoughts of the American people, it does not seem to my mind possible that men can object to the acquisition of sufficient guns and ammunition to equip the soldiers of our country if ever they are called into the field. I doubt very much whether we will ever in this country adopt a system that will give us any very great number of trained men before the outbreak of a war. The probability is that we will have to whip men into shape after the war breaks. But there ought not to be any reason why we shall not be prepared to supply them with the guns and the ammunition to make their sacrifice worth while and not useless.

So it is with no apology whatever that I present this very greatly increased amount both for guns and ammunition. For guns we are providing $2,821,500 cash, with a contract authorization of $3,500,000. I have already stated what we have provided in the way of ammunition.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. KEATING. Can the gentleman state the total amount appropriated and the total amount authorized in this bill for guns and ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have just given it. The gentleman will find the details in the report on page 19, where he will see under mountain, field, and siege cannon the items for purchase, manufacture, equipment, and so forth, and then the ammunition. That, with the exception of a small amount for the alteration of the 3.2-inch batteries, sights, and so forth, covers all the items for field artillery. Then, if he wants to get the amount for seacoast artillery, that, added to the other, will give the total.

Mr. KEATING. I was trying to get at the total provided for all kinds of guns and all kinds of ammunition appropriated for in this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not answer accurately, but with authorizations and cash it constitutes nearly two-thirds of the bill.

Mr. KEATING. That will be approximately $20,000,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. Somewhere along there.

Mr. KEATING. And what proportion of the appropriation and authorization will be expended in Government factories?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not answer that, and I will tell the gentleman why. I had hoped to be able to go into it, but that is going to depend somewhat on how much is carried in the Army bill, and also somewhat on what is carried in the sundry civil bill for the enlargement of the arsenals.

After the Army bill is passed I hope to be able when the sundry civil bill comes up, when we know the exact amount which will be available for expenditure out of both the fortifications and the Army bill, to give to the House some information as to the proportion that will be expended in Government arsenals and the proportion in private plants. I will say to the gentleman that, as he knows, we have expended most of the money in the past in Government arsenals; that is, speaking by and large. That is not true of all characters of material, but it is generally true. That will not be true for the next year or two in anything like that proportion, because we have commendably and properly increased the amount that will be expended annually, and, while we are making very great increases in the arsenal capacity, that increase can not be availed of, as the gentleman will appreciate, for a good many months after the appropriation is made; because you must build and equip a plant before you can manufacture in it.

Mr. KEATING. But the appropriation for the increased capacity of the arsenals would be carried either in the fortifications bill or in the Army bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; in the sundry civil bill. The Army bill has no jurisdiction of increases of arsenals. Provision will be carried in the Army bill for various kinds of equipment which are made in the arsenals; and until you know the amounts in that bill and in this you can not tell except roughly how much can be made in the arsenals and how much outside.

We have provided in this bill for running the arsenals at their maximum economic capacity.

Mr. KEATING. May I ask the gentleman what he means by that?

Mr. SHERLEY. I mean exactly this: To run them to the fullest extent that you can without adding to the cost of making the particular thing. For instance, you can get twice the output on a two-shift basis that you can on a one-shift basis, but you only get two and one-half times, roughly speaking, the output on a three-shift basis that you get on a two-shift basis. Manifestly if you are running on a three-shift basis you are increasing the net cost of what you are manufacturing. In some instances it will be desirable and economical to run on a three-shift basis. Broadly speaking, what we require is that the arsenal shall be run at its utmost economic capacity.

Then we undertake to safeguard the Government touching the service from private plants by providing that the price paid shall not be more than 25 per cent in excess of the cost of making them in the arsenal, as shown by the cost wherever they have been made, or the estimated cost of making them in the arsenal in instances where we have not heretofore made them. In this way the committee believes that they have safeguarded the interests of the Government as far as it is practicable. I stated in connection with the armor-plate discussion my own belief, and that was that the Government ought not to undertake exclusively to manufacture everything. I believe that we will never so equip the Government as to give it the capacity to manufacture all the things that would confront this country in the case of war.

The result of depending alone on Government manufacture would be to have the country in a position unable to take care of the situation that in war time will confront us. But I do believe that the Government ought to make something of everything of which it is the only user. Some things the Government makes I would not have it make. It makes cups, spoons, and forks and other things at Rock Island which could be bought in the open market, and where there is no need of the Government making it in order to protect itself. But of all armament and material of which it is the only user I would have the Government make some part of it in order to get the knowledge that comes only from making, which would enable it better to inspect what it buys, and also to determine, in the only way you actually can determine, the real cost of the things and thereby prevent any undue profit being made at the expense of the Government by private manufacturers.

Mr. KEATING. May the House expect to receive an estimate as to the cost of equipping the arsenals so as to take care of the appropriations in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will find in the sundry civil hearings an elaborate statement which, taken together with the hearings on the fortification bill, will give in a way the information the gentleman wishes. He will find in the sundry civil bill that there is made a provision for an immediate increase of all the arsenals, the creation of practically a new plant at Rock Island and the creation of a new powder plant to be located wherever in the judgment of the War Department it is best from the standpoint of the national need and safety.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to section 3 of the bill which provides that the appropriations in the bill shall not be expended for powder other than small-arms powder at a price in excess of 53 cents a pound.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have been informed that we are manufacturing powder at a cost of 24 cents a pound, and after adding all possible overhead charges that the cost to the Government is about 34 cents a pound, and I wanted to inquire of the gentleman whether he believed it proper to reduce this 53 cents to a lower figure, somewhat nearer the price at which we can manufacture it?

Mr. SHERLEY. My answer to the gentleman is this: I have not conducted hearings that were at all elaborate in the last two years as to the cost of powder. The committee prior to that time did have a very elaborate hearing, the result of which was the fixing of this present limitation. My understanding is that it is costing us about 40 cents, including overhead charges. Awhile back it was costing us over 40 cents, perhaps 43 cents, and it may be yet.

The 10 cents difference is quite a large amount, of course, and yet it is perfectly fair to say that you can not expect, assuming that we are making a thing at rock-bottom price—and I believe we are as to powder—to ever get from private manufacturers powder at the same price at which it costs us to make it, because they have a number of expenses that the Government does not have, and naturally they are not making powder simply for the pleasure of making it, but expect and are entitled to a reasonable profit. The committee did not feel like reducing the price at this particular time below 53 cents, first, because it did not have accurate enough information to warrant it, and, second, because at this time the private powder manufacturers are getting a good deal more money than that for all they can make, and in many instances could sell much more than they are making, owing to the unusual demand now existing abroad. What the committee did do, however, or rather what the subcommittee having in charge the sundry civil appropriation bill did, was to provide for the erection of a new powder factory which will serve to about double the capacity of the Government and thereby enable us to make practically all of the powder that the Army uses, or very nearly so, and under these circumstances it did not seem wise to us, without more information than we had, to upset the price that was fixed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I inquire if we make a Government-factory small-arms powder that is excepted by this section?

Mr. SHERLEY. We do; but I do not carry that in this bill. We do not provide for small-arms powder here. Small-arms powder costs more to make, due to the different size of the grains and the difficulty in drying and other mechanical processes, and the price of it has always been in excess of that for cannon powder; but inasmuch as this bill does not make provision for it, I am not well enough informed to answer the gentleman's question. There may be a very small sum expended out of the funds in this bill for small-arms powder, but practically none. We did not feel that we were warranted in entering that domain and fixing the price.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I understood the gentleman to say that the new factory will contemplate the manufacture of all powder, small-arms and otherwise, that the Government uses?

Mr. SHERLEY. My understanding is that they now make all the small-arms powder.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman speaks of doubling the capacity of the plants for the manufacture of powder, and also in the course of his very elaborate and exhaustive speech has told us of the increase of appropriations for the present year. They were increased last year, if I recall, and also in previous years. In view of all this increase in the matter of armament and the manufacture of ammunition, and doubling the capacity of plants, what provision is being made for the personnel to properly equip the new or enlarged establishments?

Mr. SHERLEY. What does the gentleman mean by personnel—officers or workmen?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Officers in particular, officers who are qualified to enter into the manufacturing business or who are capable of being inspectors.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will understand that that is another matter that my committee does not deal with, but he will also recall that by virtue of the provisions contained in the Army reorganization bill there has been a considerable increase in the Ordnance Corps, and that ought to be able to relieve the situation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To take care of the increase?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask because I want to be able to follow up the personnel matter. At one arsenal with which I am familiar I know that they are running short-handed now, so far as experienced men are concerned, and on important work officers are assigned who have had a few months' experience. For instance, in the manufacturing departments some of them are put up against highly technical work, and many of them are withdrawn for purposes of inspection where purchases are made at private plants. And, as a matter of fact, to-day some of our arsenals are very much undermanned in the matter of experts capable of doing the kind of work the Government ought to have done to protect itself.

Mr. SHERLEY. I took occasion, when the Army reorganization bill was up, to call attention to the need of increase in the ordnance corps and the difficulty of training men for that service. The one place where we will break down more than anywhere else if war ever does come on a great scale is just the place where we and similar nations have always broken down, and you can not apparently impress it upon the people until the fact occurs, and that is in the overhead. Men constantly think that they are making economy by cutting out people at the top, and then when there comes an expansion of 300, 400, or 1,000 per cent, you have absolutely swamped the work of your chief officers and a great cry goes up as to the incompetency of those officials.

When war of great magnitude comes, if it ever shall come, in this country you will break down in Washington in the War Department, not because of the lack of ability of men, but because you will not make provision in peace time for men who have supervision and direction so that when the need comes they may be there to take care of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman, in line with that which he has just expressed, that the Government has contracts with companies like the Bethlehem Steel Co. I think they have $700,000 worth of work recently, and that the investigation there ought to be made by qualified and thoroughly experienced officers of the United States Government. Sometimes it happens that civilian assistants have been assigned to do that work. There is a case of an optical contract, for instance, where I have knowledge that a mechanic—not that he is not qualified, but a mechanic who has no special sworn obligation to the Government—was assigned to the work of inspection, and there are a number of other cases of that kind I could cite, and I wanted to find out from the gentleman just where we ought to make provision to meet the requirements of the Government after we have made this increase and what I believe to be this necessary expenditure for the Government in the way of armament.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, before concluding, as I hope to do in a moment——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I was called out for a few minutes when the gentleman commenced his speech. Has the gentleman made reference to the Mobile tests?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not. I had intended to do so, and I will be glad to speak of that now. I have here a thorough, confidential report which was made by the board which witnessed the tests at Mobile, and I have also some photographs that are interesting to gentlemen, if they desire to look at them, showing some of the results achieved there. I can, perhaps, briefly tell you what was sought to be accomplished there and then give you some of my impressions thereon, which will give you the layman's point of view.

First, let me say we built down near the fortifications that protect Mobile a fortification exactly similar to the regular fortifications that we have. Behind that we mounted a 12-inch disappearing gun and they then had dummies, life size, placed on the gun platforms and on the battle commander's station and elsewhere, just as they would be placed in time of war. There were two naval vessels sent there which were instructed to fire a given number of shots at stated ranges at this fortification in order that it might be determined by actual trial what the effect would be upon a modern fortification by fire from modern battleships, and the purpose of those tests may be briefly stated as follows:

When projectiles charged with high explosives fired from a modern battleship strike a modern emplacement and detonate in its immediate vicinity to determine:

First: (A)—The effect it has upon the emplacement itself; (B)—A modern rifle and its disappearing carriage; (C)—The ammunition stored in the magazine; (D)—The personnel manning the emplacement; (E)—The accessories, including telephones, sights, range finders, and other apparatus; and Second, to determine the probability that a modern battleship will make destructive hits at long ranges.

The program provided for this was:

In the first phase the battleship New York will at anchor fire fifteen 14-inch armor-piercing projectiles with a bursting charge of 32 pounds of high explosive at a range of approximately 5,800 yards. All possible information was furnished the ship and an opportunity was made to obtain hits at certain parts of the parapet. By "all possible information" was meant this: They had all the distances actually measured off; they had in front of the parapet two targets so as to give them a direct-line range and every facility to enable them to hit a particular point they wanted to.

In the second phase the battleship New York will at anchor fire ten 14-inch semi-armor-piercing projectiles with a bursting charge of 88 pounds of high explosive, at a range of approximately 8,530 yards, with reduced powder charges which obtained an angle of fall corresponding to the range greater than 16,000 yards. In other words, by reducing the amount of powder charge they would get the same distance only by a greater elevation of the gun, and the fall of the projectile would be at a greater degree and would correspond to the fall of a projectile shot from a 16,000-yard range, the reason for that being the desire to see how much protection was afforded to the gun and to the personnel by the parapet

In the third phase the battleship Arkansas fired thirty 12-inch projectiles, 10 target and 20 armor-piercing, with a bursting charge of 22.3 pounds, at ranges approximating 16,000 yards. In this phase the shots were fired while the battleship was under way and no data were furnished the ship from shore.

Now, without undertaking to read, which should not be read, the exact findings of the board, the following may be read for the information of the committee as to some of the conclusions reached:

After examining the emplacement and considering all the data the board is of the opinion—

That the type of emplacement used in this test is satisfactory, and that the overhead and front cover for magazines, as embodied in this emplacement, is sufficient.

That the disappearing carriage is a better type of carriage for concealment and protection than the barbette type. Three projectiles which passed over the gun and carriage and detonated in the parados would have struck a modern barbette carriage.

That projectiles which struck the sand did not bury themselves, but were deflected upward almost immediately, and that sand therefore affords excellent protection.

That fragments of projectiles detonating in a parados of sand do no serious damage to the personnel in the emplacement.

That some form of shield should be provided for the disappearing carriage in order to avoid delays due to sand and débris thrown into the emplacement by detonating projectiles.

That no aerial power and communication cables should be permitted in the immediate vicinity of an emplacement, and that cables in the vicinity of an emplacement should be buried at least 5 feet deep.

That the probability of hitting a modern emplacement at 16,000 yards under the best conditions is not greater than 10 per cent, and that only a small percentage of these shots which hit the emplacement will do any material damage.

A parados is back of the gun and the gun platform. The emplacements are in front, and are the protection behind which is the disappearing gun. And then some distance to the rear is a rear wall, which is a protection from rear attack, and it is spoken of as the parados.

So much of that part of the official conclusion. I witnessed all of these tests. The first day I spent ashore, about half a mile or less than that away from this fort which was being shot at, up on the parapet of one of the regular fortifications. The next day I spent aboard the battleship New York in order to see the fire from the vessel as well as from the land side. Everybody was impressed with the tremendous accuracy with which the Navy shot. It is true that they were aided greatly in two phases of the shooting by the ranges, but there was no time at which they missed one side or the other more than 30 or 40 feet, and while some of the shots went short, and quite a number went over, it was remarkable how well they shot.

Mr. KELLEY. Were the ships stationary or running full speed?

Mr. SHERLEY. They were stationary in two phases, and in other cases were moving. They were accustomed to shooting with the ship moving and that itself did not make much difference. The second thing that impressed one, and impressed one tremendously, in view of the fact that all of those shots hit within a space about twice the size of this room both in the way of being short or over, or one side or the other, was the practical absence of any real damage they did. There was one shot that would have killed the battle commander, at least, the dummy which was up there and was of life size, made of canvas, and supported on a tripod, was knocked over. It was knocked over, without any piercing of the canvas, by the effect of the blast of the shell which hit just a very few feet in front of it, knocking it and a couple of other dummies over. The man on the gun pointer was not hurt. There were one or two other shells, one that pierced a man in the gun crew in the leg, and another would have killed a man by striking him in the forehead, but the damage that was done to the fortification in no instance was such as could not have been repaired in less than two hours, with the exception of one shot, and in no instance would the damage have interfered with the use of a gun longer than a couple of minutes necessary to brush off some of the sand in the mechanism of the carriage so as to make it easier to elevate. There was no doubt as to the value of the disappearing gun carriage.

As I have read here, there were three shots that went right over the top of the parapet and hit in the parados behind, that would have put a barbette gun out of business, a gun mounted on a barbette carriage, and which would have been up above, but which did not hit the disappearing gun and could not have hit it unless it passed over at that particular moment when the disappearing-gun was up firing, which is only a fraction of a second. I think everybody was impressed with the fact that the disappearing gun carriage, inasmuch as now they are building new disappearing gun carriages with all around fire and high elevation, as great as they want, is free of the objections that have been urged.

Another thing that impressed one was the effect of a shell striking the sand. A shell would hit the sand and usually would immediately ricochet; sometimes it buried in, and coming out detonated, tearing up a crater that would be 20 or 30 feet in size, but doing no further damage.

There was one shell that hit certainly not more than 15 feet away from the concrete that protects the magazine. It simply tore a big hole in the sand and came on out, going over the fortification, and not even cracking the concrete itself.

There was one shell that hit within two feet of where we were all wishing for a shell to hit. We were particularly anxious that a shell should hit right on the crest of the fortification immediately in front of the disappearing gun, which would by all means be the most damaging place that a shell could possibly hit, and every effort was made to hit that particular spot. Unfortunately, with the commendable desire to save a little money in building this fortification, they made the wall that connected the emplacement in front of the gun and the magazine of less thickness than it is in a modern fortification. It was a little strip of concrete, about 20 feet long, but it was just about half the thickness of concrete that is used in the regular fortifications. As luck would have it, one shot hit just exactly on the crest where we wanted it, but where this concrete was thin, in place of in front of the gun or the magazine where the concrete was of the regular thickness. The result of that shot was to bite out a piece of concrete about as big as that table [indicating] and to scatter pieces around an area that would cover about 8 feet. The shell ricochetted and detonated about 8 feet above and did no other damage.

That would not have put the battery out of commission. While it might or might not have killed some of the men, it would not have seriously interfered with the battery.

The only thing that was not done that would have served completely to demonstrate what it was desired to have demonstrated, was to have a volume of fire that would correspond to the volley firing that would probably take place in the event of a number of battleships firing at the same time at a given fortification. With this exception in this experiment everything was in favor of the Navy and nothing in favor of the Army. They were shooting without being shot at. They were having all the guides possible to enable them to hit accurately. But it must be remembered also that they were simply firing one shot after another, and not undertaking to smother, as they probably would in the case of an actual engagement, the fortification.

But the value of sand as a protection was one of the most impressive things. If I had to be shot at by one of those guns I think I would rather be behind a good sand dune than any place I know, because in nearly every instance the shell was deflected and rose, detonating in the rear, or if it detonates in the sand the result is simply to dig a big hole and scatter the sand, whereas if it should strike concrete there is always the danger of fragments of the concrete as well as fragments of the shell. One shell did not detonate at all; perhaps more than one. They would burst into very small fragments. We picked up fragments that frequently were no larger than the end of your thumb, which if they should hit a person would make a very nasty wound, and if in a vital place a fatal wound.

Everybody came away convinced of the fact that the fleet that undertakes at long range to put a fortification out of commission has its work cut out for it, and that it will probably cost, in expenditure of ammunition and risk of loss, away beyond what would be warranted in undertaking such an effort. I have not the slightest fear of battleships standing off and engaging modern fortifications. They are not going to do it in the future any more than they have done it in the past, unless there is a compelling reason.

The only reason that the Dardanelles fight was ever made was because it seemed to England of the utmost importance that she should open up that particular channel and get in there and enable the Russians to have an outlet through the Dardanelles. She knew that she was going up against an almost impossible task, and what did prove to be an impossible task.

Now to say that we are ever going to have a fleet ordinarily attack a fortification is, to my mind, to say what is not at all probable. The fortifications will serve their purpose. They will keep the fleet away from the area they cover. They will not do more than that. As I said earlier in the day they are not expected to do more than that, and unless you are able to supplement your fortifications with a mobile force sufficient to take care of an enemy that moves out of the area protected by them you have not made adequate defense.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of what the gentleman said in the early part of his speech about our exposed cities and fortifications, and in view of the experiments he has just described so vividly, is it the opinion of the gentleman that if the gun is of equal caliber in the ship and fortification the advantage will be with the forts?

Mr. SHERLEY. The advantage is overwhelmingly with the forts, for a number of reasons. In the first place, the ship shoots at a target that is not very visible, and in many ways is concealed, that is vulnerable only to a limited extent and over a limited area.

It shoots from a moving platform, with a short base line from which to determine its range. The fortification shoots at a target plainly visible, in many instances silhouetted against the sky, a target vulnerable in all its parts; and the fortification shoots from a stable base, with a base line so long as to make the reckoning from triangulation very much more accurate. If, with those advantages, the Army could not shoot better than the Navy, I should be very much disappointed in the Army.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So the advantage would be with the fortifications if they were manned with guns of equal power to those on the ships.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think so.

Mr. SLOAN. I assume that a large amount of this money which is appropriated is to be used to prepare against fleet or sea attacks. Has the matter of attack from the rear, after the landing of an army, which has been discussed on this floor recently, been looked to to some extent in this appropriation?

Mr. SHERLEY. No, because this appropriation does not deal with that subject, except incidentally. We are providing that in the future the guns shall have all around fire, which will enable them in a measure to participate in their own defense. But it must remain a mobile army proposition to defend fortifications from the rear. I do not mean that the garrison of a fortified place would not take any part; but they would take part largely in a mobile sense, and presumably the mobile army should be prepared to meet the enemy after he has been prevented from landing in the area that is fortified; and this bill has never contemplated dealing with the question of defense from the land, except in an incidental way.

There are quite a number of things that have been undertaken for quite awhile past. An elaborate study has been undertaken of the topography of the land surrounding the fortifications, and plans have been made for strengthening, and for barbed wire entanglements and for other matters. It is the idea to work out such a detailed scheme that in the event of war there would be for every man an envelope containing his instructions as to what to do, where to go, and what to get, in connection with the defense of those particular areas.

Before I close there is one other matter that I wish to bring to the attention of the House. The committee on its own initiative carried a provision in the following language:

For the procurement of such gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures and other special aids and appliances, including such plans, specifications, and detailed drawings as may be necessary for the immediate manufacture of arms, ammunition, and other material necessary for the defense of the country, and for plans for and the installation of such material in private plants in the United States under such contract and agreement as may be made by the Secretary of War, $1,000,000: Provided, That not exceeding 25 per centum of said sum may be used in obtaining from plants so equipped such war material as may be desired: Provided further, That not exceeding $50,000 worth of such material may be purchased from any one person or company, and in making such expenditures the laws prescribing competition in the procurement of supplies by purchase shall not govern.

Authority for this purpose was provided in the consideration of the Army reorganization bill. Prior to that the committee had given attention to the subject and interrogated the ordnance officers relative to it. It was testified that even in cases where manufacturing plants in a way were equipped to manufacture war materials in the sense of having the buildings and general lathes and tools it would require something like eight months to so equip them with the special gauges, jigs, dies, and so forth, necessary to turn out the particular character of material to make the various parts that would have to be assembled in making the finished rifle or gun or shell. While very large orders have been placed in this country for various kinds of munitions it was only after the lapse of many months that any actual deliveries were had. The provision that we have recommended seeks to enable the Government to equip a number of plants with these appliances and then by giving small orders to have them actually do enough work to learn how, upon need, to turn out rapidly such material.

The provision dispenses with competitive bidding upon such orders so as to enable the Government to select such plants as may be deemed desirable from the military standpoint, and it is saved from abuse by the limitation as to the size of the contracts that may be given any one concern. The wisdom of this provision will appear to all who have given any special attention to the subject and will do more, considering the amount involved, in actually preparing the country for supplying the Government with necessary war material in a short time than any other single step that has been taken.

There is a considerable increase in the amount for the use of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification. It is evident that the board will have a great deal more work in experimentation and of testing new inventions than heretofore, and it was deemed wise to supply them with ample funds for this purpose.

I beg to thank the committee for its attention. I have spoken very much longer than I expected to. As we read the bill I will endeavor to explain anything that gentlemen may desire. [Applause.]

Under authority granted me to extend my remarks I desire to append herewith the report which accompanies the fortification appropriation bill.

[House of Representatives, Report No. 498, 64th Cong., 1st sess.]

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report.

The Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the accompanying bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, submit the following explanation thereof:

The estimates on which the bill is based aggregate $23,375,123.80, and in addition thereto authority is requested for contract authorizations amounting to $12,500,000, a total of estimated appropriations and authority to enter into contracts $35,875,123.80; the first mentioned sum includes $23,305,123.80 submitted in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1917 and $70,000 submitted in House Documents Nos. 430 and 571. The accompanying bill appropriates $21,997,050, and in addition authorizes contracts in sums aggregating $12,300,000, a total, including appropriations and authorizations, of $34,297,050; the amount of direct appropriations is $16,936,833.10 more than was appropriated for the same purposes at the last session of Congress, and $1,378,073.80 less than the estimates submitted for direct appropriations.

SCOPE OF THE FORTIFICATIONS BILL.

Before discussing in detail the estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1917 and the recommendations thereunder, and the history of previous appropriations for fortifications, it is not amiss to state the actual scope of the fortifications appropriation bill, which covers a field larger than its title indicates. It embraces not only the subject of seacoast fortification, but also makes provision for the mobile artillery and its ammunition for the Regular and Volunteer Armies of the United States, but not for the militia, provision for the latter being made in the Army appropriation bill.

The bill deals entirely with matériel and does not deal with the personnel of the Army.

It provides the funds for the purchase or manufacture of such matériel, and has in the past carried large appropriations for the creation of several of the arsenals of the Government. The practice of recent years, however, has been to make provision for the building or enlargement of Government arsenals in the sundry civil bill, except as to the purchase of machinery incident to the Government manufacture of matériel provided for in the annual fortification bills. As incidents to these broad basic purposes, the bill deals with many minor matters, as will appear from a reading of the detailed portions of this report.

While the subject would clearly be within its proper scope, the provisions for the fortification of the Panama Canal are not carried by it but are carried in the sundry civil bill, the reason for this arrangement being the desirability of keeping in one appropriation bill all the expenditures relating to the canal.

Having outlined the scope of the bill, it becomes proper to consider at some length the two major subjects dealt with. This is made the more necessary as to seacoast fortifications, due to the widespread misconception of the purposes they are intended to serve.

SEACOAST FORTIFICATIONS.

It is the popular belief that our fortifications are designed to protect all the shores of continental United States and the insular possessions from invasion by a hostile force, and that they are adequate only to the extent that they would prevent such invasion. No greater misconception of their function could be had. The author of this report is unaware of any responsible military authority ever suggesting such a purpose. Certainly the cost of such numerous fortifications to accomplish such a purpose would be beyond the purse of even this, the richest of all nations.

But though this is known by all students of the subject, criticism is continuously aimed at our system of fortifications because of the absurd assumption that they should accomplish the impossible; while many, properly believing that our fortifications are excellent but with the same mistaken view as to their purpose, fail to appreciate the need for other means of defense.

The chief and real purposes to be served by our fortifications are to protect from bombardment large centers of population where the damage that might otherwise be inflicted could not be thought from a military point of view admissible; to protect from destruction establishments of military value, such as navy yards, coaling stations, arsenals, etc.; to deny to an enemy the use of important harbors as a base for offensive operations against either our fleet or land forces; to preserve such harbors as a base or refuge for our own fleet and permit it to be used in its most efficient way by seeking out and engaging the enemy; to afford refuge and protection to our shipping; and to compel the enemy in order to achieve military results of importance to resort to an expedition involving the transportation of troops across the seas and effect their landing at some place not possessing the strategic value had by the places fortified.

Of necessity many coast towns would have to be left without such defense, where the damage that might be done in the event of control of the sea being lost by our fleet would be deplorable, but would not be of such character as would really impair the Nation's well-being or resisting power.

Fortifications are deemed sufficient when they serve these purposes, and the prevention of invasion then becomes the duty of the mobile army. They are deemed sufficiently strong if they compel the enemy to land in order to effect their capture.

Prior to the Civil War our coast defenses were the equal of those of any country, but shortly thereafter, with the introduction of rifled cannon and armor, with the resulting inefficiency of our smooth-bore guns, they became obsolete. Many years passed without any action being taken to remedy this situation. Finally, during President Cleveland's first term, an act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, provided that—

"The President of the United States shall appoint a board, * * * which board shall examine and report at what ports fortifications or other defenses are most urgently required, the character and kind of defenses best adapted for each, with reference to armament, the utilization of torpedoes, mines, or other defensive appliances. * * *"

As a result of this action, the President appointed a board, composed of the Secretary of War and high Army and Navy officers, that made a most elaborate study and report on the subject. This board, known popularly as the Endicott Board, designated the following 27 places to be fortified:

New York, San Francisco, Boston, the Lake ports, Hampton Roads, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Portland, Me., Rhode Island ports and Narragansett Bay, Key West, Charleston, S. C., Mobile, New London, Savannah, Galveston, Portland, Oreg., Pensacola, Wilmington, N. C., San Diego, Cal., Portsmouth, N. H., Cumberland Sound at Fort Clinch, ports on the Kennebec River, Me., at Fort Popham, New Bedford, Mass., ports on the Penobscot River, Me., at Port Knox, and New Haven, Conn.

It stated in detail the character and amount of armament at each place and the estimated cost of the same. It also stated the character of mine and torpedo defense desired, and fully covered every phase of the subject.

No report has probably ever been made to Congress on any subject that was more exhaustive or of a higher order of excellence.

Congress a few years later entered upon the execution of the scheme proposed, and for many years it formed the guide by which the Secretary of War determined the estimates that should be submitted to Congress in order to fortify the ports therein recommended with the amount and type of armament required in each instance. It will be understood that these plans required many modifications of detail brought about through the improvement of the quality of steel and manufacture of powder, with the resulting increase of the power of guns and by the development of an efficient type of disappearing-gun carriage for heavier guns, together with changes resulting from the development of commercial and strategic importance of different ports.

The original report of the Endicott Board made no provision for reserve ammunition, probably due to the fact that the development of a satisfactory powder was at that time in an experimental stage. Provision for such reserve was subsequently made from time to time. On March 5, 1906, President Roosevelt transmitted a message to the Congress in which he inclosed a report of the National Coast Defense Board, which had been appointed by him on January 31, 1905. This report modified and brought up to date the report of the Endicott Board and added a scheme for the fortifications of the insular possessions of the United States, and is usually referred to as the Taft Board report. It submitted a revised list of the ports requiring defense. This list, arranged in geographical order, is as follows:

Home ports: Kennebec River, Portland, Portsmouth, Boston, New Bedford, Narragansett Bay, eastern entrance to Long Island Sound, eastern entrance to New York, southern entrance to New York, Delaware Bay, Baltimore, entrance to Chesapeake Bay, Hampton Roads, Potomac River, Cape Fear River, Charleston, Savannah, Key West, Tampa, Pensacola, Mobile Bay, Mississippi River, Galveston, San Diego, San Francisco, Columbia River, Puget Sound, lake ports, and Kiska Island.

Insular ports: Guantanamo, San Juan, Guam, Subic Bay, Manila Bay, and Pearl Harbor and Honolulu.

Isthmian Canal ports: Colon and Panama.

It considered at length the changes it thought necessary to be made in the character and amount of armament for these various fortifications; the need and character of submarine mines and torpedoes and other accessories to a proper scheme of seacoast defense, and recommended in detail the armament that should be placed at each of the fortifications enumerated, with the detailed cost for each. It also, as directed in the order creating it, indicated the relative importance of the places recommended to be defended. In pursuance of the plans and projects recommended in that report, estimates were submitted annually by the Secretary of War during the period 1906–1914 of the sums needed to carry on the work.

In February, 1915, the Secretary of War appointed a board, designated as the War Department Board of Review, to revise the projects of the Taft Board, and it is this latest revision that forms the basis of the estimates presented to Congress at this session and of the bill submitted herewith. The projects of this last Board of Review contemplate an expenditure for continental United States and the insular possessions of some $82,064,557, and of $13,995,000 for the Panama Canal, making a total of $96,059,557.

An additional sum will be necessary for the fortification of places that will doubtless need to be fortified within a few years but for which no definite scheme has been recommended, these latter fortifications being largely for Alaska, Guam, and Guantanamo. The board's report contemplates additional fortifications at Portland, Boston, New Bedford, eastern entrance to Long Island Sound, Sandy Hook, including Rockaway Beach, Delaware Bay, Cape Henry, Charleston, Pensacola, New Orleans, Galveston, San Francisco, Columbia River, Puget Sound in continental United States, in Hawaii, the Philippines, and at the Panama Canal. The report covers all phases of the subject, and among other things it states:

"The last comprehensive report upon the needs of our seacoast defenses was that made by the Taft board on February 1, 1906. That board recommended that additional armament be emplaced at a number of localities in continental United States, but as the appropriations for new fortifications that have been made since that date have been confined mainly to the insular possessions and the Panama Canal, comparatively little of the additional armament proposed by that board has been installed. The period that has elapsed since the date of the report of the Taft board has been marked by radical changes in naval designs, which included the development of the dreadnaught type of battleship, a type carrying heavier armor and much more powerful ordnance than its predecessors. As a consequence both the offensive and defensive capabilities of warships have been materially increased.

"In recognition of this development the department during the early part of the current year adopted the policy that the major caliber direct-fire gun to be installed in future should be of at least 16-inch caliber. Considerations of the same character, more particularly the greater structural strength and increased deck protection of modern battleships, have led the Board of Review to recommend that seacoast mortars to be installed in future should be of 16-inch caliber. In addition to these types, the projects of the board, as outlined hereinafter, call for the utilization as howitzers of a number of 12-inch guns that are now on hand, by mounting them on barbette carriages of a special design that will permit of the attainment of a range of 30,000 yards."

The board then enumerated the projects approved, with a brief statement of the objects expected to be accomplished by the proposed additional armament at each place.

While it may not be proper to state in detail the proposals made, it is proper to state that the ends sought by the additional armament are at certain points to defend the harbors and existing defenses against long-range naval bombardment, made necessary by the increased range of guns of modern battleships; to increase the volume of gunfire at certain places in order to make it adequate to meet the increased volume of gunfire that could be directed against the fortification by a fleet of modern warships; and in a few instances to cover water areas not covered effectively by existing armament; and to deny to an enemy the use of certain harbors not now protected.

The total additional armament for continental United States included in the above projects comprises twenty-two 16-inch guns, twenty-four 12-inch guns mounted for long-range fire, twenty-three 6-inch and four 3-inch guns, and forty-eight 16-inch mortars; for the insular possessions eight 12-inch guns mounted for long-range fire; and for the Panama Canal four 16-inch guns, four 12-inch guns mounted for long-range fire, and twelve 16-inch mortars.

In addition to the above, the projects of the board include one hundred and thirty-four 3-inch antiaircraft guns for the seacoast defenses of continental United States, seventeen 3-inch antiaircraft guns for the insular possessions, and eight 3-inch antiaircraft guns for the Panama Canal.

The board also recommends the construction of six 16-inch movable howitzers and an experimental 14-inch gun on railroad car mount for defense against hostile landings in unfortified harbors.

It also changes the basis for the reserve seacoast ammunition, believing the old allowance contemplated in the former scheme to be inadequate. It recommends—

"(a. For guns in continental United States, except guns of 8-inch caliber and upward on inner lines of defense, allowances equal to one-half the accuracy life of the respective calibers; for mortars, except on inner lines of defense, an allowance equal to one-fourth the accuracy life.

"(b) For armament of 8-inch caliber and upward on inner lines of defense in continental United States, allowances equal to one-half those for outer lines.

"(c) For guns in the insular possessions and on the Canal Zone, allowances equal to the accuracy life of the respective calibers; for mortars, an allowance equal to two-thirds of the accuracy life."

The board also designated the armament that it considered of insufficient military value to warrant incurring the cost involved in providing a manning personnel or ammunition therefor, as well as that which upon the installation of the proposed additional armament would become of insufficient military value.

DISAPPEARING GUN CARRIAGES.

It considered the advisability of continuing the disappearing gun carriage in seacoast fortifications and said:

"The board is of the opinion that the disappearing principle should be retained and that it should be the type of mount for direct-fire guns, except in those instances where special conditions may render advisable the installation of the turret or the barbette mount."

It has been thought proper to thus review the action of these various boards in order that it might be clearly understood that Congress has in the past followed the judgment of the best military experts of the Government in making provisions for the seacoast fortifications.

While it is true that to a limited extent Congress has not always appropriated the full amounts that have been asked at the time when asked, it is nevertheless true that Congress has always followed the approved plans of the War Department touching the character of the seacoast fortifications, as well as the judgment of the department as to the places to be fortified. The author of this report recalls no instance in which Congress has undertaken to fortify places not recommended by the War Department, or to erect fortifications of different character than those recommended. As the result of this consistent policy of Congress, the fortifications of the United States are not excelled by those of any other nation, and while it is necessary now to expend the considerable sum indicated in further improvements of them, this necessity has not resulted from any unwise action of Congress taken in disregard of the advice of Army experts.

Some considerable part of the sum necessary to be expended to complete existing armament relates to matters already undertaken by Congress, but not yet completed. This is especially true of the fortifications at Cape Henry. The greatest part of the balance necessary has been brought about by virtue of the development of modern battleships. Such development has resulted in the very great increase in the number and power of the guns carried and increased range and accuracy of fire of such guns, making necessary additions to the land fortifications to offset these factors. The growth of cities has in certain instances also brought a large area of the population without the zone of fire of hostile ships without the necessary protection by land batteries of equal or greater range. The remainder is chiefly to supply the very much greater quantity of reserve ammunition now deemed necessary.

The character of the bill reported is evidence of the belief on the part of the committee that the policy of Congress in the past in following the recommendations of the Army experts should be continued in the future. Later on in this report somewhat detailed statements are made as to the purposes sought to be accomplished by the estimates submitted this year, and the appropriations recommended. It is proper now to state that no request of the department presented by the officers called to support the estimates submitted has been ignored. Such material changes as may have been made have been chiefly the result of revised estimates of the department, as disclosed by the testimony of officers appearing before the committee. If the policy adopted by the committee is acquiesced in and continued by Congress all of the recommendations made by this recent board of review will within the space of a very few years have been brought to realization. Of necessity, appropriations for much of this fortification work are restricted by the physical limitations of construction of emplacements and the creation of armament.

For some years past the committee has followed the policy when once a project is undertaken of supplying funds for its completion as rapidly as they can be availed of. The estimates in recent years that have been requested touching the insular possessions and Panama have been allowed practically in their entirety, and those fortifications are not surpassed by any in the world. The recommendations of the Board of Review touching additional armament are very moderate in view of the tremendous extent of the country and its possessions, and in view of the further fact of the very great and recent developments in naval armament. That they are so moderate is the very best tribute to the existing excellence of the fortifications we possess. It may be informing to state that there are now emplaced in the continental United States, insular possessions, and Panama the following guns:

"Guns now mounted or being mounted (after eliminating batteries declared obsolete by the War Department Board of Review): 16-inch, 1; 14-inch, 24; 12-inch, 111; 10-inch, 131; 8-inch, 49; 6-inch, 206; 5-inch, 52; 4.7-inch, 31; 4-inch, 4; 3-inch, 276; mortars, 408. Total, 1,293."

The mine defenses are elaborate and practically completed for all existing fortifications and provision will be made for mine defenses in connection with new fortifications as soon as the emplacement of guns makes such action desirable.

RESERVE AMMUNITION FOR SEACOAST GUNS.

Reference has already been made as to the new basis for the supply of reserve ammunition for the guns already emplaced and those contemplated. A review of the subject in the light of the European war caused the board to very greatly increase the amount of such reserve ammunition thought to be requisite, and it has submitted this year an estimate of three millions of dollars, with a contract authorization of three and one-half millions to be expended toward securing a new reserve. The committee has allowed in its entirety the estimate submitted, making an appropriation in effect of six and one-half millions for this purpose, as against previous annual appropriations of $200,000.

RADIO-DYNAMIC TORPEDOES.

For many years past the desirability of having an offensive weapon in connection with seacoast fortifications in addition to the passive ones of land batteries and fixed or floating mines has been felt by all authorities. The officers of the War Deparment in order to acquire such a weapon have for more than a year past been witnessing tests of the invention of John H. Hammond, jr., for the radio control of dynamic torpedoes. The report of these officers and the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications has been in favor of acquiring the invention of Mr. Hammond and the installation of several units of the system. The committee conducted very elaborate hearings, having before it Army officers who had witnessed the tests and others familiar with the system. As questions arose involving the viewpoint of naval officers relative to the effectiveness of such a weapon and the means that might be adopted for protection against it, the committee had several Navy officers to present their views.

As the result of the testimony submitted, and after a very full consideration of the subject, the committee has felt warranted in recommending to Congress an appropriation of $750,000 for the acquirement of the rights of Mr. Hammond, conditioned, however, upon a satisfactory demonstration of the value of his system before a joint Army and Navy board, and provision is made for a sum sufficient to conduct such test. A proposal has been made by Mr. Hammond and the company owning the rights in the invention whereby in the event of a favorable report immediate acquisition of all rights may be had. The sum involved was so large as to make the committee feel that it should take the extra precaution of having a report by a joint board of Army and Navy officers before the rights were acquired. Provision is also made, in the event that the rights are acquired, for the building of one unit, and should the expectations of its advocates be realized provision can be made for the installation of other units as desired.

MOBILE GUNS AND MORTARS FOR SEACOAST DEFENSE.

The board of review in its report recommends, as has been stated, the use of mobile mortars and guns of large caliber, transported by rail, as auxiliary defenses for our coast, and the committee has recommended an appropriation for the building of one such mortar and gun. The Ordnance Department is engaged at present in working out the detailed plans for such gun and mortar, and it is believed that they will successfully solve the problem, in which event provision can be made for the rapid acquisition of a number of such mortars and guns.

Aside from the usual estimates submitted in connection with the maintenance of existing fortifications and those for the completion of fortifications recently started, the estimates submitted by the department had in view the procurement of necessary land at Rockaway Beach, in connection with the defense of New York City, and for additional land at San Francisco and San Pedro. Sums adequate for all of these purposes are carried in the bill. Estimates were also submitted and allowed for the building of emplacements and mounting seven 12-inch guns upon barbette carriages, with high-angle fire, so as to give to such guns a range of 30,000 yards. It is contemplated that these guns shall be placed at New York, Boston, and either Portland or San Francisco. Estimates were also submitted and sums are carried for the emplacement of fifty-four 3-inch antiaircraft guns at various of the fortifications.

Sums were asked and allowed for pushing forward the fortifications at Cape Henry as fast as physical conditions would permit. Provision was also made for the construction of six 16-inch guns, four of which will go to Cape Henry and two to Rockaway Beach.

INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

For the insular possessions, estimates were submitted for the land defenses of Hawaii and the Philippines and allowed. Estimates were also submitted and allowed for the mounting of eight 12-inch guns with high-angle fire and for 10 antiaircraft guns, 6 of the 12-inch guns to be located in Hawaii and the remaining 2 in the Philippines. Estimates were submitted for $1,700,000, with a contract authorization of $500,000 for reserve ammunition for the insular possessions and allowed in its entirety. Provision was made and allowed for the completion of mine defenses in the insular possessions.

FIELD ARTILLERY.

As previously stated, the bill carries items for the mobile artillery and the ammunition therefor for the Regular and Volunteer Army. Estimates for such purposes have been submitted in the past based on various schemes relative to the size of the mobile army to be equipped, and of recent years such estimates have been submitted with regard to the carrying out of what is known as the Greble Board scheme to equip an Army of 500,000 men. Recently a new board was created, popularly known as the Treat Board, that has made an elaborate report covering the whole subject which, except as to certain matter deemed confidential, is set out in the hearings. While this report has never been finally approved by the War Department it has become so plainly apparent in the light of the European war that greatly increased supplies of guns and ammunition of existing calibers and others of very much greater calibers than heretofore contemplated would be necessary, that the estimates submitted were very much greater than any that have ever been previously submitted to Congress.

The committee did not undertake to pass judgment upon the report of the Treat Board, nor does it express any opinion as to how far that report should be accepted in lieu of the Greble Board report, but it could not help but be impressed with the very great need of additional equipment for the mobile artillery, and as the sums asked were very, very far short of the amount necessary to be appropriated if a scheme even one-half as ambitious as the Treat Board's is to be carried out, the committee felt warranted in allowing practically in their entirety the sums requested. These appropriations and contracts or obligations authorized total something over $10,000,000.

The committee upon its own initiative has recommended an appropriation of a million dollars for equipping private plants with the machinery and fixtures requisite to enable them to supply various kinds of war material. Further along in this report is set out in its entirety the language of this provision.

Provision is carried at the end of the bill requiring and directing that the arsenals be used at their full economic capacity, and a limitation is placed upon the price that may be paid for any material purchased from private manufacturers. These provisions are set out in full at the end of the report. Full hearings were had on all matters relating to the bill, and in particular the committee sought to obtain accurate information touching the present capacity of Government plants for the manufacture of war matériel, together with certain data touching the possibility of enlarging them and the cost. In view of the fact that there is pending before the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill various estimates relative to these arsenals and their enlargement, and that it has been customary in recent years to have that bill carry appropriations for such purposes, the committee makes no report upon the need and desirability of enlarging Government plants. The information contained in the hearings, however, together with that that will be available in connection with the sundry civil bill it is hoped will enable Congress to fully advise itself of the facts touching this most important subject.

FISCAL STATEMENT.

The following statement of the various appropriations in connection with the subject dealt with by this bill is of interest. In addition to the financial information given, an attempt is made to give a skeleton outline of the entire bill, with a brief statement as to the different agencies of the War Department under which the money is expended and the work executed:

During the Forty-ninth Congress (fiscal years 1887 and 1888) no appropriations were made on account of fortifications, their maintenance and armament, and for the 12 fiscal years 1875 to 1886, inclusive, the appropriations by Congress on this account averaged only $540,750 per annum, and only $463,500 per annum for the 14 years, including 1887 and 1888, for which latter two fiscal years no specific appropriations were made, as stated.

The bill reported herewith contains appropriations in continuance of the policy adopted by the Fiftieth Congress in the passage of the acts approved September 22, 1888, and March 2, 1889, and continued at the succeeding terms of Congress in acts approved August 18, 1890, February 24, 1891, July 23, 1892, February 18, 1893, August 1, 1894, March 2, 1895, June 6, 1896, March 3, 1897, May 7, 1898, March 3, 1899, May 25, 1900, March 1, 1901, June 6, 1902, March 3, 1903, April 21, 1904, March 3, 1905, June 25, 1906, March 2, 1907, May 27, 1908, March 3, 1909, June 23, 1910, March 4, 1911, June 6, 1912, February 13, 1913, June 27, 1914, and March 3, 1915.

The appropriations by said acts for the 28 fiscal years 1889–1916 aggregate $158,644,913.62, of which sum $136,814,971.62 was appropriated for the United States and $21,829,942 for the insular possessions, an average of $5,665,889.77 per annum.

The fortifications appropriation acts enacted during the Fifty-fifth Congress (fiscal years 1899 and 1900) appropriated $14,287,396, in addition to which amount sums aggregating $8,674,898 were provided in deficiency appropriation acts for fortifications and the armament thereof, and the further sum of $13,049,751.86 was allotted for the same objects from the general appropriation of $50,000,000 made for the national defense in the act of March 9, 1898, making in all $36,012,045.86 available for fortifications and the armament thereof under appropriations made during the Fifty-fifth Congress. In addition to the above, the sum of $2,500 was appropriated for fortification purposes in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army dated September 22, 1888; $35,000 by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army dated March 2, 1901; $259,200 by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army dated June 30, 1902; and $389,000 by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army dated March 2, 1903; total, $685,700.

There was also appropriated by the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government approved April 28, 1904, $591,046.25; under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government approved March 3, 1905, $40,000; under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government approved June 30, 1906, $158,953.75; by the deficiency act of July 7, 1898, $0.70; by the deficiency act of February 14, 1902, $2.68; by the deficiency act of July 1, 1902, $4.38; by the sundry civil act of March 4, 1911, $154,667; and by the sundry civil act of March 3, 1915, $8,000; total, $952,674.76.

The urgent deficiency act of February 14, 1902, carried $3,000 for fortifications and the deficiency act of March 4, 1907, $977.79.

The joint resolution approved June 23, 1914, appropriated $31,000 to complete the purchase of necessary land at Cape Henry, Va.

The total appropriations made for fortifications and other works of defense since 1888, and since the recommendations of the Endicott Board of 1885, including the appropriations made in deficiency and other acts, including the Army bills dated September 22, 1888, March 2, 1901, June 30, 1902, and March 2, 1903, the sundry civil bills dated April 28, 1904, March 3, 1905, June 30, 1906, March 4, 1911, and March 3, 1915, and allotments made from the national defense fund amount to $182,042,916.03, of which sum $159,908,307.03 was for the United States and $22,134,609 for the insular possessions, and has included the necessary cost of maintenance; $91,578.95 of the amount appropriated for the United States was expended for submarine mines in the insular possessions and the Canal Zone.

The scheme of seacoast fortifications for the continental United States contemplated by the Endicott Board, as modified by the National Coast Defense Board (see S. Doc. No. 248, 59th Cong., 1st sess., for report), and as revised to date, it is estimated, will cost in the aggregate $199,187,584.08, of which amount the sum of $129,282,707.40 has been appropriated, a more particular discussion of the details of which will appear elsewhere in this report. Of the amount appropirated there has been returned to the Treasury the sum of $1,057,530.32.

The scheme of fortifications for the insular possessions contemplated by the National Coast Defense Board, as revised to date, it is estimated, will cost in the aggregate $33,236,759, of which there has been appropriated the sum of $22,134,609, the details of which are also discussed more at length elsewhere herein.

The difference between the estimated whole cost of the so-called Endicott scheme of fortifications, as modified and revised to date, for continental United States, $199,187,584.08, and the appropriations made therefor to date, $129,282,707.40, less amount returned to Treasury, $1,057,530.32, amounts to $70,962,407.

The difference between the estimated whole cost of the scheme of fortifications for the insular possessions, as revised to date, $33,236,759, and the appropriations already made therefor, $22,134,609, amounts to $11,102,150.

The difference between the combined estimated cost of both schemes, $232,424,343.08, and the combined appropriations therefor to date, $151,417,316.40 (less amount returned to Treasury, $1,057,530.32), amounts to $82,064,557.

The difference between the $151,417,316.40 already provided toward the scheme of the Endicott Board, modified by the National Coast Defense Board, and the sum total of appropriations, $182,042,916.03 for fortifications since 1888, amounting to $30,625,599.63, is represented in expenditures for erecting and equipping the gun factory at Watervliet, the gun-carriage factory at Watertown, the powder factory at Picatinny, N. J., the Ordnance and Fortification Board, the manufacture of mountain, field, and siege guns, and ammunition therefor, and for sundry other objects incident to providing and maintaining a system of seacoast defenses, and the amount returned to Treasury.

In addition to the foregoing general statement as to the history of and appropriations for the scheme of seacoast fortifications adopted by Congress in 1888 and prosecuted by annual appropriations since that year, it is deemed pertinent at this time to discuss somewhat more in detail the subject of these very considerable expenditures.

These items of appropriation may be roughly divided into three general classes, namely:

1. Fortification of seacoast forts, including ammunition.
2. Supply of Field Artillery matériel, including ammunition.
3. Miscellaneous items related to the above but not strictly forming parts thereof.

The first classification can be subdivided into three items: (a) Items pertaining to new armament and installation, including reserve ammunition. These items embrace guns, gun carriages, emplacements, sites for defense, electrical installation, searchlights, sea walls, submarine-mine structures, fire-control instruments and structures, and ammunition; (b) items pertaining to maintenance, repair, and alterations of property embraced in subdivision (a), except ammunition; and (c) items pertaining to seacoast target-practice ammunition, including appliances for same, and subdivisions (a) and (b) should also be segregated according as they relate to continental United States and the insular possessions.

Under these three subdivisions of the first general division there has been heretofore appropriated for continental United States, including practice ammunition used in the insular possessions, $129,282,707.40. Of this amount, under subdivision (a), items pertaining to new armament and installation, there has been apportioned $90,557,055.59; items relating to reserve ammunition, $15,452,885.98. Under subdivision (b)—that is, the item for maintenance, repair, and alteration—there has been appropriated $16,101,177.51. Under subdivision (c), seacoast target-practice ammunition, there has been appropriated the sum of $6,114,058. There has been covered into the Treasury unexpended $1,057,530.32.

Under subdivisions (a) and (b) there has been appropriated for the insular possessions $22,134,609. This total includes under subdivision (a) items pertaining to new armament and installation, $18,425,887.12; items for reserve seacoast ammunition, $3,200,000. Under subdivision (b), for maintenance, repair, and alteration, there has been appropriated $508,721.88. So that the total of appropriations for both continental United States and the insular possessions, under heading No. 1, amounts to $151,417,316.40.

The second general classification, to wit, supply of Field Artillery material, including ammunition, can also be subdivided into three classifications similar to that of item No. 1. In other words, (a) those pertaining to new material, including reserve ammunition; (b) those pertaining to maintenance, repair, and alteration; and (c) those pertaining to target-practice ammunition.

The total appropriated has been $13,845,800. The total of the above that is included under the subdivision a, new material, including reserve ammunition, is $12,168,800 of which $5,361,600 was for such reserve ammunition, leaving $6,807,200 as the amount that has been appropriated for new material. Of this latter sum, $1,175,000 is counted as being for new material, though it is literally for the purpose of making new batteries out of old ones.

Under subdivision b, for maintenance, repair, and alteration, there has been appropriated $491,000. Under subdivision c, for target-practice ammunition, there has been appropriated $1,186,000.

The third general classification, to wit, miscellaneous items related to the preceding but not strictly forming parts thereof, consists of the following items, totaling appropriations of $16,779,799.63:

Board of Ordnance and Fortification	$2,600,000.00
Proving ground, Sandy Hook	1,747,178.00
Machine guns not used for seacoast defenses	385,073.00
Ordnance establishments, buildings, gun factory, powder factory, etc	3,376,952.00
Machinery for ordnance establishments	470,097.83
Experimental guns, carriages, and ammunition	653,041.03
Testing experimental guns and carriages, armor plates, etc	148,085.84
Implements, equipments, alteration, and maintenance of old armament	519,038.00
Field material and ammunition of old designs	6,331,819.75
Return to Treasury	110,928.69
School submarine defense	16,500.00
Amount expended for temporary batteries (national defense fund)	302,817.99
Construction of post buildings, act June 6, 1896	100,000.00
Repair and maintenance Fort Monroe, Va., acts Mar. 2, 1895, and June 6, 1896	18,267.50

The cost of carrying out the projects of the War Department Board of Review, including the installation of new armament, and the completion of accessories for existing armament, is estimated at $70,962,407 for continental United States, and $11,102,150 for the insular possessions.

In addition to the above for the continental United States it is estimated that there will, in the future, be annually required $1,000,000 for maintenance, repair, and minor alterations, and $516,000 for target practice.

And, in addition, it is also estimated that $70,000 will be annually required for maintenance, repair, and minor alterations, plus a proportionate increase due to the installation of new armament as it is supplied for the insular possessions.

FIELD ARTILLERY AND AMMUNITION THEREFOR.

The appropriations for field artillery material recommended by the committee for several years past have been in furtherance of a War Department project adopted in 1911, which was based upon the report of the Greble Board. As has been stated, the department during the past year convened a board of officers, known as the Treat Board, for the revision of the project of the Greble Board. The recommendations of the Treat Board have been submitted to, but have not been approved by, the War Department. These recommendations contemplate a very material enlargement of the program of the Greble Board, due to an increase from 6 to 11 in the number of field arms on which the project is based, an increased ratio of guns to troops, an increase in the power of the guns recommended, and an increase in the supply of ammunition per gun to be accumulated.

Under the second general classification, first noted, it is estimated that the sums remaining to be appropriated under the Greble Board project, for items under subdivision (a) are as follows: For new material, including funds for the alteration of 3.2-inch batteries, $3,241,718.07; for reserve ammunition, $4,187,812; making a total of $7,429,530.07. These sums are exclusive of the amount, $17,421,239.43, remaining to be appropriated for new material and ammunition for the militia, for which appropriations are carried from year to year in the Army bill. The total remaining to be appropriated under the project of the Greble Board, therefore, for new material and for reserve ammunition, is $24,850,769.50.

The corresponding sums remaining to be appropriated under the project of the Greble Board, modified to accord with a department plan for the Army as embodied in H. R. 12766, present session, are for new material, $3,513,881.80; for reserve ammunition, $3,514,312; and for the militia, $52,832,064.40; or a grand total of $59,860,258.20.

The corresponding sums to procure the material recommended by the Treat Board for both the Regular Army and the militia, are for new material, $158,800,000; for reserve ammunition, $292,000,000; or a grand total of $450,800,000. The corresponding sums required to carry out the recommendations of the Treat Board, if modified as recommended by the Chief of Ordnance, are for new material, $118,630,941.10; for reserve ammunition, $129,655,439; or a grand total of $248,286,380.10. In both of the latter two projects the totals given are exclusive of the sum of $10,500,000 estimated as required for the procurement of motor trucks to be furnished by the Quartermaster Corps when war is imminent, and of the cost of Signal Corps equipment.

In addition to the above, it is estimated that there will be required annually $100,000 for alteration, maintenance, and repair, and $400,000 for target practice.

In the present estimates there is asked, under the first general division for continental United States, subdivision a, new material, etc., $11,916,473.80, of which sum there is recommended in the accompanying bill $10,301,200; under subdivision b, maintenance, repair, etc., $1,210,750, of which amount the bill carries $967,750; and under subdivision c, target-practice ammunition, $490,000, and $26,000 for submarine-mine practice, all of which is recommended in the bill, making a total estimate of $13,643,223.80, of which the bill carries $11,784,950.

In the insular possessions, under subdivision a, there is asked for new material, ammunition, etc., $2,499,150, of which there is recommended in the bill $2,487,100; and under subdivision b, maintenance, repair, etc., $127,750, of which the sum of $98,500 is recommended; making total estimates of $2,626,900, of which $2,585,600, as above stated, is recommended; making a grand total of estimates of $16,270,123.80 for both continental United States and the insular possessions under the first general division, of which there is recommended $14,370,550.

Under the second general classification there is asked, under subdivision a, new material, etc., including alteration of 3.2-inch batteries, $5,727,500, of which $5,716,500 is recommended, with an authorization of $5,000,000; under subdivision b, maintenance, repairs, etc., $105,000, of which $100,000 is given; under subdivision c, target-practice ammunition, $862,500, of which $400,000 is given; making total estimates of $6,695,000, of which the bill carries $6,216,500, with authorization of $5,000,000 as above.

Under the third general division there are asked the following items:

Current expenses, ordnance proving grounds, Sandy Hook, N. J	$75,000
Expenses of officers at the proving ground and compensation of draftsmen	35,000
Board of Ordnance and Fortification	300,000
Total	410,000

All of the estimates under the third general division $410,000 are recommended and in addition thereto the sum of $1,000,000 is included in the bill, as follows:

"For the procurement of such gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including such plans, specifications, and detailed drawings as may be necessary for the immediate manufacture of arms, ammunition, and other material necessary for the defense of the country and for plans for and the installation of such material in private plants in the United States under such contract and agreement as may be made by the Secretary of War, $1,000,000; Provided, That not exceeding twenty-five per centum of said sum may be used in obtaining from plants so equipped such war material as may be desired: Provided further, That not exceeding $50,000 worth of such material may be purchased from any one person or company, and in making such expenditures the laws prescribing competition in the procurement of supplies by purchase shall not govern."

JURISDICTION OVER EXPENDITURES.

The funds appropriated under the fortification acts are expended by or under the supervision of the Chief of Ordnance, the Chief Signal Officer, and the Chief of Engineers. In general terms the Chief of Ordnance has charge of those items pertaining to seacoast cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments; mountain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments; ammunition for seacoast cannon; ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon; ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for seacoast artillery practice; ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for mountain, field, and siege artillery practice; alteration and maintenance of seacoast artillery; alteration and maintenance of mobile artillery; current expenses of the ordnance proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J., necessary expenses of officers at the proving ground, and compensation of draftsmen. In addition he has charge of the accounts, although not of the disbursements, pertaining to submarine mines, and the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, and expends the funds allotted him by the Secretary of War for fire-control instruments.

The Chief Signal Officer has charge of the operation and maintenance of fire-control installation at seacoast defenses and the expenditure of such funds as may be allotted him by the Secretary of War for the procurement of wiring and instruments for communication service from the appropriations for fire control.

The Chief of Engineers has charge of the construction, maintenance, repair, and modernization of emplacements for seacoast armament; installation and replacement of electric light and power plants and searchlights at seacoast fortifications; procurement or reclamation of land for sites for fortifications; preparation of plans for fortifications; tools, electrical, and engine supplies for operating electric light and power plants in seacoast batteries, and reserve lights therefor; construction, maintenance, and repair of sea walls and embankments; construction, preservation, and repair of structures for torpedo defense; land defenses of seacoast fortifications, exclusive of electrical communications and armament; and the expenditure of such funds as may be allotted him by the Secretary of War from fire-control appropriations for construction of fire-control stations and accessories and purchase of lands and rights of way.

The estimate for fire-control stations and accessories, electrical communications, and range finders, and other instruments for fire control at the fortifications is submitted by the Chief of Coast Artillery, and the appropriation when made is carried on the books of the disbursing officer of the War Department, expenditures being made by the Chief of Ordnance, the Chief Signal Officer, and the Chief of Engineers in accordance with allotments made them by the Secretary of War for particular purposes. The estimate for submarine mines is prepared by the Chief of Coast Artillery and disbursed under his supervision; the accounts are kept by the Chief of Ordnance.

LIMITATIONS.

The following provisions with respect to expenditures are recommended as follows:

On page 13:

"SEC. 2. That all material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty."

On page 14:

"SEC. 3. That appropriations in this act shall not be expended for powder other than small-arms powder at a price in excess of 53 cents a pound."

On page 14:

"SEC. 4. That except as expressly otherwise authorized herein no part of the sums appropriated by this act shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of any material at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government."

On page 14:

"SEC. 5. That expenditures for carrying out the provisions of this act shall not be made in such manner as to prevent the operation of the Government arsenals at their most economical rate of production, except when a special exigency requires the operation of a portion of an arsenal's equipment at a different rate."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, this morning the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] obtained unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a telegram containing some utterances of Mr. Hughes in accepting the Republican nomination. I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating the special message that Mr. Hughes, in January, 1910, while governor of New York, sent to the legislature of that State, voicing his opposition to the income-tax amendment to the Federal Constitution, which had been passed by a Democratic Congress, and requesting the Legislature of New York not to ratify the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not know whether that message has already been printed in the RECORD, and I shall not object to this request; but if we are to begin to extend in the RECORD everything that is to be used in the campaign, why, this side will also have something to present.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the gentleman that I think it very appropriate at this time that the country know the views of Mr. Hughes on this very important subject. I do not think the message has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt it was printed in the RECORD at the time, but that is neither here nor there. This morning I asked unanimous consent to extend the telegram that Mr. Hughes sent to Senator HARDING. That was an ordinary courteous suggestion.

Mr. HARRISON. It was very properly granted.

Mr. MANN. Now I am quite willing, if gentlemen want to put in this message, to have it done; but then we shall print in the RECORD Mr. Woodrow Wilson's book.

Mr. HARRISON. No; we do not think that ought to be done, because everybody has read Mr. Wilson's book.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. The gentlemen on the other side of the House never read it until we read it to them.

Mr. HARRISON. We are very willing to put it in the RECORD, I will say to the gentleman, but everybody throughout the country has read it, anyhow.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Mississippi has never read it, or he would not say what he does.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman from Illinois is presuming that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the interpleader bill as it passed the House on Saturday.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants to get that consent in the House, does he not? He does not want to print that here?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his request.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] desired some time.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Virginia will probably speak under the five-minute rule. There will be no objection to giving him time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I have a great deal of confidence in and respect for the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is in charge of this bill. I have listened carefully to his explanation of the bill and to his answers to the various inquiries which have been made, and I expect in the main, at least, to follow in his lead in reference to this bill.

The naval bill was not satisfactory to me. The Army reorganization bill, as far as the present emergency is concerned, is not worth much. Of course, I do not know whether this bill is sufficient or not, but I think that the gentleman from Kentucky has really risen to the occasion and has endeavored to present to the House a bill that will help to take care of the existing exigency and emergency, and I am very glad of it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOUSTON). The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of fire-control stations and accessories, including purchase of lands and rights of way, purchase and installation of necessary lines and means of electrical communication, including telephones, dial and other telegraphs, wiring and all special instruments, apparatus, and materials, coast signal apparatus, and salaries of electrical experts, engineers, and other necessary employees connected with the use of coast artillery; purchase, manufacture, and test of range finders and other instruments for fire control at the fortifications, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $600,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope the committee will accord me 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may proceed for 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may proceed for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, the existing world cataclysm has brought the American people abruptly to consider the necessity of providing for their defense. The House is now entering upon the consideration of the pending bill upon the subject of fortifications. The Army bill has but recently become a law, and the Navy bill, having heretofore passed the House, is now in the Senate; so we seem to be nearing the end of our present deliberations upon this great subject.

Unquestionably, the right of self-defense is as applicable to a nation as to a man. But notwithstanding the existence of this natural right, without which national or personal life would be almost a thankless gift, the founders of the Republic made plain the duty of the people and the Congress to provide in advance for the defense of the Nation from internal or external violence or war. So we find among the six great objects or inducements in the preamble of the Constitution for the formation of the American Union a clear declaration that we must "provide for the common defense," a duty so obvious and necessary we also find almost the same words in the Articles of Confederation. Indeed, it is a truism that the objects of the preamble declaring for a more perfect union, the establishment of justice, domestic tranquillity, general welfare, and the blessings of liberty, would be mere empty declarations if the Nation were denied the power to provide for their defense. Without such a power our institutions would be futile and our tasks in this Hall vain and ignoble.

But, Mr. Chairman, the founders of the Republic did not conclude this subject by the declaration in the preamble. Nor did the founders confer upon us a privilege or right essential to existence so much as they imposed upon us a duty that we must perform as patriots. So in section 8 of Article I of the Constitution we find that Congress has the plain power to make effective our rights and duties in relation to the national defense. In this section Congress has the power—

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money for that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

To provide and maintain a navy.

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, etc.

Therefore the granting of these several powers are not merely supplementary or auxiliary to the great object named in the preamble, but they constitute a body of affirmative mandates to the Congress to provide for the defense of the Nation.

Nor, Mr. Chairman, should we approach the consideration of this great subject from a partisan standpoint. If I remember aright the exhortation of the President, which fell from his lips in this hall, was a clear call for the exclusion of any and all partisanship in our deliberations upon this subject. Surely the defense of our beloved country, with its achievements and its contributions to the civilization of the world, is greater than all ties to all parties that have ever lived and gone or that will ever hereafter come and go. [Applause.]

MILITARISM.

Mr. Chairman, our practical duties in providing for the national defense should not be obscured by apprehensions as to the growth and danger of militarism. None of the three bills mentioned gives ground for such apprehension. The character of our institutions, the superiority of the civil authority over that of the military by virtue of constitutional requirements, the almost unbroken practice of historic precedent, the nourishing traditions of freedom, all dispel the slightest reason for such apprehension. American military leaders have never been the originators of war. Washington or Green, Jackson or Taylor, Grant or Lee did not fan the embers of war. Nor did Farragut or Semmes. The war-making influences, the real war-making power, has always been the people of the United States. The President can not and the Congress will not go in advance of them. Mr. Chairman, our institutions will have to be fully overturned before the civil voice is drowned by that of the military.

Does this bill now under discussion tend to swell the influence or authority of the military power? Can stationary coast fortifications for defense against aggression beget militarism? No. This measure is self-defense, pure and simple; no reason, no fears, no sophistry, no audacity can make it otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, the development of civilization has not as yet reached a stage in which we can provide for the pacific settlement of all international controversies or the continuous absence of domestic conflicts. I have been reluctantly forced to this conclusion. I have long looked forward to the day, that I have thought was not far distant, when international controversies should be settled upon the judgment seat and not upon the battle field. But the exuberance of my hopes has been chilled by the present immeasurable catastrophe in Europe. We are compelled to pause and inquire as to our progress.

About 150 years ago the voice of Burke, vibrant with emotion at the dismemberment of Poland, cried out:

After all our love of tranquillity and of our expedients to preserve it, alas, poor peace!

What would be the tone of his utterance to-day, could he observe the transcendent devastation that is being wrought by the wrath of man? He said Poland was only a breakfast for any great armed power of Europe. Is a continent or a hemisphere sufficient for a dinner to-day?

But, Mr. Chairman, we should not be utterly cast down. Might already struggles in the throes of exhaustion; the still, small voice of peace, the forces of the spirit and soul of civilization, will yet become triumphant.

THE PENDING BILL.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not discuss the technical features of this bill. I have not sufficient information upon a subject so technical to give an opinion of worth to the House or to the country. Washington is reported to have said to the Continental Congress what may be a wise aphorism for to-day, that "you can not conduct a war with a debating society." The number and caliber of guns and other instruments of war, explosives, projectiles, and their velocity, emplacements, and elevations, fortifications and areas to be protected thereby, are questions for experts, for the officers of our Army and Navy. I have no distrust of these officers. Their duty is to provide for the contingencies of war as far as skill and foresight may avail; these officers take the first chance of death, and their judgment upon such momentous questions is of more weight than those of us who discuss war and its horrors upon the floor of this House. [Applause.]

Two features in this bill I would allude to. One is the fortification at Cape Henry, which will protect, in my opinion, a larger area of country than almost any fortification on the Atlantic seaboard. The range of modern guns makes them most effective for the entire width of the approach or the channel from the ocean to the Chesapeake Bay, thereby protecting at one narrow strait the cities of Norfolk, Richmond, Newport News, Baltimore, and the Capital of our Nation, to say nothing of numberless safe and convenient landings for armies when once within and past the Capes and great trunk lines of railways running north, south, east, and west easily accessible. So a fortification at this particular point accomplishes at the very threshold what may not be accomplished thereafter by supreme efforts, and by the employment of enormous means and forces.

I congratulate the committee, Mr. Chairman, upon authorizing the Government to begin experiments with mobile artillery. I only regret the authorizations do not admit of larger and more experiments. We must protect our seacoast from the landing of aggressive armies at many places beyond the protected areas afforded by our fortifications. Existing railways or those subsequently to be built should be employed to accomplish this purpose. If troops can be moved by railways, so can the engines of war. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the establishment of armies, of navies, and of fortifications do not solve the problems of national defense. Behind the lines of battle, behind blazing bastions, are the great supplies of men and material which we must constantly organize and move to meet the exigencies of the conflict. The transportation systems of the country are the initial and elementary means for perfecting this great organization.

THE ARMY BILL.

I have no present purpose to discuss the Army bill. In the discharge of my convictions as a Representative of a great and fine constituency, I voted for the Kahn amendment for a Regular Army of 220,000, and subsequently for the Senate amendment for an army of 250,000, but upon the failure of these amendments I voted for the conference report of an authorization for a Regular Army of about 200,000. Referring for a moment to the amendments just alluded to, I must say that I differed with reluctance from many of my colleagues on the Democratic side as to these two subjects. I could only see common prudence and common wisdom in giving the power to the President to recruit the regular forces to 250,000, if in his judgment the conditions demanded such an increase. The Army is not raised to 250,000 by the amendment, but only the authority is given to the President to so raise it if in his responsible discretion it should be done. To withhold from him such authority under present conditions and impending perils I could not approve of. But, as I stated in the outset, difference of convictions or of parties in a matter of such moment should not overcome the individual conviction of a Representative. [Applause.]

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the federalization of the National Guard will not secure the number of recruits contemplated by some of the advocates of that system. Nor do I believe that the continental scheme will secure any large number of troops. Therefore, if the national defense is at all exigent, if it is not "paper and pack thread," we have no other available recourse for recruits save that of the Regular Army; 220,000 or 250,000 men constitute no menace and afford no nucleus for the growth of militarism. Mr. Madison, who stood in as constant apprehension of the evils of a great standing army as any great statesman of his day, said:

Let a Regular Army, fully equal to the resources of the country, be formed; and let it be entirely at the devotion of the Federal Government. * * * The highest number to which, according to the best computation, a standing army can be carried in any country does not exceed one one-hundredth part of the whole number of souls, or one twenty-fifth part of the number able to bear arms.

According to this basis of apportionment our present population of 100,000,000 would yield a regular army of 1,000,000, a number occasioning no danger, according to Madison. Obviously, therefore, an army of 250,000 is little more than a national constabulary, or a sufficient guard for our Mexican boundary.

THE NAVY BILL.

Mr. Chairman, I voted for the Navy bill, though I should like to have seen two or more battleships embraced in that measure. [Applause.] I also voted for the so-called Butler amendment to this bill. Perhaps it is well for the country clearly to understand the meaning and object of this amendment. The bill provided for an expenditure of $11,000,000 for the establishment and operation by the United States of a plant for the manufacture of armor plate. There are in this country three private armor-plate factories, from which the United States buys armor plate cheaper and better than the armor plate bought by Great Britain, Germany, France, Austria, or Japan. The Butler amendment provides that the United States Government shall fix its own price for the armor plate furnished by the three plants in this country, and if such a price is not acceptable to these plants then the Government is to expend the $11,000,000 for the object appropriated. In other words, the proposition involved in the Butler amendment is Government regulation rather than Government ownership of armor-plate plants.

It is not established that the existing armor-plate factories are of insufficient capacity to supply the Navy's needs, or that the Government could manufacture armor plate cheaper than has been done or will be done by the private plants. Moveover, it will take at least three years to establish a Government armor-plate plant, and then perhaps a year or more before it can begin operation, for it should be borne in mind that the Government is utterly without experience, without experts or workmen with which to man and operate such a plant.

What becomes of our national defense in the meantime? Why not put the $11,000,000 in armaments as soon as possible for the immediate protection of our country? Why waste this money and time if there is any real need of national defense? Again, if the present manufacturers of armor plate retire from business by threat of the competition involved in the establishment of a Government plant, what will we do for armor plate in the meantime? If war actually breaks out, it is obvious that we will need all of the existing private plants running at their fullest capacity.

The experiences of the great nations are against a Government-owned armor-plate plant. No Government, as I am informed, manufactures its own armor plate, other than Japan, where conditions are very different from those existing with us. It is said that the present armor-plate plants have been extortionate in their charges. Is this any reason why our Government should hereafter practice extortion upon the people, for the increased cost and inefficiency of a Government-owned armor-plate plant will have to be paid for out of the taxes imposd upon the people? But, Mr. Chairman, the Butler amendment provided fully for the protection of the people, in that it provided for the regulation by the Government of a private plant, the fixing of the price, and the quality of the armor plate purchased by the Government. It is interesting to inquire what conditions the Government would exact of itself in the manufacture of armor plate. We can regulate a private plant, but it may be very difficult to regulate a public plant. Political conditions may soon ensue that will make operation and efficiency an insuperable task.

Mr. Chairman, aside from the inexpediency, aside from the extravagance, I suggest that we should move slowly in establishing Government enterprises. The socialization of private enterprises is a menace to that individual liberty and initiative and enterprise which has brought our people from weakness to strength. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, not all of the days to come will be fair. The track is not all upward. The constant increase in the number of Government officeholders and employees looms large and foreboding. Almost every man employed in the Government plants of our country is interested from a political standpoint. He of necessity becomes active in politics, and when the officeholding classes become so powerful, so active, so influential, I fear that their political activities will outweigh and overreach the residue of the American electorate. It will no longer be a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, but a Government of officeholders, by officeholders, and for officeholders.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman fear no such power at the hands of the officers in the Military Establishment, and the rank and file of them?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman, I presume, did not hear me at the outset of my remarks. I am not afraid of such power in the hands of the officers or the privates. I think the examples that have illumined the pages of our history afford the least cause for apprehension that the officers and men will lead us from republicanism to the man on horseback. Moreover, we hold under the Constitution the purse strings; we appropriate or not every two years.

Mr. HARDY. Is it not a fact that we hold the salaries of civilian employees just as we hold the salaries of military and naval employees, and is it not a fact that the military and naval employees organize just as much as do the civilians?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the gentleman speaking of the soldiers when he speaks of the military employees, or the officers?

Mr. HARDY. I am speaking of the rank and file and of the officers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Officers and soldiers do not vote, but civil employees of the Government, under the military department, do vote, and I fear them just as I fear the organizations of other Government employees that from time to time have made Members on this floor rather lacking in courage, and I do not exempt myself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In just a moment, if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Texas. I voted for the nitrate plant. Why, because the property essential to make high explosives does not exist in the United States, and, therefore, we were wholly dependent for our supply upon a foreign nation that could lay an embargo upon this supply at any moment and thereby cut off our existence. I voted similarly for the Alaskan Railway, with some doubts and misgivings, but upon the ground that there was no private enterprise capable or willing to undertake the imperative work that should be done in that Territory. In other words, wherever the people will not perform a work that has to be done, then the Government ought to do it; and wherever the Government can do a great work better than the people themselves can do it, perhaps the Government ought to do that. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Answering the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas, would it not be fair to state that while during the last three or four years civil employees have increased to the extent of thousands, there has been a very small disposition on the part of the people to engage in military positions or to enlist themselves in the service of their country?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is one of the troubles.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And is it not a fact to-day we are asking for men to engage in the service of the Army and Navy while they are holding out to secure better-paying positions than they can obtain under the Government?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not following the whole of the gentleman's suggestions, there is one I would like to emphasize, and that is, that one of the great troubles involved in our whole propaganda of national defense is to acquire the number of men essential to equip our forces on land and on sea. And another important fact which I do not know how to surmount is that in our efforts to secure recruits we are appealing to their commercial and not to their patriotic sense of duty.

I would like to see the day when all Americans would perform military or naval service for a short and fixed period, and from a sense of duty rather than the wage or a living. Only when we have substituted duty for dollars will we have solved the problem of true military training.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thank the gentleman and the committee.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will yield to the gentleman for one question.

Mr. PLATT. In the same line of the question asked by the gentleman from Texas, might it not be suggested that neither the soldiers nor the officers claim a vote?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I so said a little while ago. At least I thought I did. The soldiers, the enlisted men themselves, do not vote. It is the civil employee who may be under the military or Navy Department who does the voting and whom I now have in mind. I am not criticizing him for that. You and I would do the same thing under similar circumstances; but because we are supposed to look with judicial calm upon the situation is no reason why we should not protect the rank and file of the people and American institutions. [Applause.]

SIZE OF NAVY.

Mr. Chairman, I desire at this stage to submit a few brief comments upon the size or strength of the American Navy. Manifestly the strength of the Navy should be equal to the work it may be called upon to do. Consequently we frequently hear it said that other nations determine the size of our Navy. There is much truth in this, for we must be able to meet that force which is employed against us, and adequate strength in this particular is largely a question for experts. There are so many changing conditions, interests, and ambitions that the problem has too many human factors in the equation to make it easy of solution.

But, Mr. Chairman, I would speak of the policies which should determine the size of a navy. First is the policy of the defense of the right and life of American citizens upon the seas and in foreign lands. The citizen is the primal and consummate expression of democratic sovereignty. When the citizen can not protect his rights and the Government fails to protect them for him, then we surrender our independence, our sovereignty; we stand ashamed and afraid among the nations of the earth. This was the principle recently involved in the so-called McLemore resolution, which undertook to exercise the powers of government to curtail the natural and inalienable rights of American citizens upon the high seas, and our contention in respect to these rights has now happily been accepted by the German Government.

The extraordinary extent of our coast line requires a large Navy, which must necessarily be increased when we take into consideration our insular possessions and the very vital strip of territory embracing the Panama Canal. These are all objects which may at any moment demand the exercise of the supreme power of the naval forces of our Government.

In addition to these needs is a great policy, known as the Monroe doctrine, which, perhaps, is no stronger than the Navy. I can not now discuss this doctrine, which I would not wish extended or expanded, as contended for by some of America's public men. For the purpose of measuring the adequacy of our naval strength, I would hold it to the original proclamation of Mr. Monroe, which was a prohibition against territorial aggrandizement by any non-American power at the expense of any American power on American soil, and prohibition upon the extension of monarchic systems to any portion of this hemisphere. With respect to Mexico, I would withhold the application of the doctrine as long as possible; I would rather base our right to deal with the present Mexican problems not upon this doctrine but upon the ground that Mexico is our next-door neighbor and we are entitled to have from her neighborly conduct.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is an insuperable difficulty in adjusting by measurement or apportionment the size of a Navy to meet a foreign policy, for the very obvious reason that there are but few fixed foreign policies of any country. Such policies, after all, are the pronouncements of human beings to meet present exigencies or contemplated future conditions, and therefore they necessarily rest upon the shifting sands of opportunism. Perhaps the Monroe doctrine is the most prominent and fixed of our foreign policies. Our old policy of avoiding "foreign entanglements," if adhered to, requires no Navy to support it.

but if abandoned may require a great or a small Navy, according to the particular circumstances of the case.

ADMINISTRATION.

May I say this, and say it with great diffidence, that I do not think we have the proper coordination of our Army and Navy. I think we ought to have a committee or a board of our most distinguished officers, of both the Army and Navy, that may be called either a committee or board, for the national defense. We have a General Board of our Navy, and we have a General Staff of our Army. Where do they meet? When do they cooperate? Consider the lost motion, the wasted intelligence, that should be conserved and coordinated in the defense of our country. Take the present bill, which has been so exhaustively explained by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. Why should we have both a committee on fortifications and a Committee on Military Affairs? Why should we sit here now and go through what we should have done some days since when we had under consideration the military bill? There is a too frequent duplication of forces, of energies, and, practically, of expenses. I do not think one needs to see through a millstone——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit just one observation?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. While I do not think the arrangement of jurisdiction is altogether proper, any man who has served on any of the military committees knows that it is beyond the capacity of a committee as a whole to deal with the whole subject, and if to-morrow you were to give the jurisdiction all to one committee it would have to deal with the subject through subcommittees if it wanted to deal with it in detail at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We may have to deal with it through subcommittees, but there ought to be one Committee on Miliary Affairs which should include within its natural jurisdiction fortifications. Moreover, when we stand upon the floor and give opinions based upon expert advice we ought to have that advice from some great committee or board whose opinion stands as the final and scientific expression on any given subject, and not to have us upon this floor making statements supported by this officer and contradicted by that officer.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am afraid my time has gone, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. In that connection I have often wondered if a little expense could not be saved to the Government by consolidating the Army and Navy recruiting stations in the different towns.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We may, perhaps should, do away with some Army posts, with some Navy stations, and with some recruiting stations; and I do not know, if the gentleman is interested in this suggestion, but that we could save time and money by putting the first-year men of the Naval Academy and the Military Academy in the same school, say, at Orchard Lake in your State, for the first session, and then let them go back to their respective academies. I think that subject is worthy of consideration. It would mean economy of space, time, and money, for the training the first year is practically the same. It would mean in after years a more friendly and thorough understanding between the two branches of service. But I can not discuss this now.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to have an officer of the Navy and an officer of the Army in the same town to do recruiting duty?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would not like to express an opinion upon that. But I can not understand why a plant that can make a gun for our coast fortifications can not make one for our battleships.

DELUSIONS.

Mr. Chairman, I fear the American people have long labored under some delusions. I have already mentioned one—our exaggerated fear of militarism. I would recur again to this subject. Is it possible that when the purse strings are held by Congress, when it is prohibited by the Constitution from making an appropriation for the maintenance of an army for a period exceeding two years, that we should be afraid of a militarism that would overthrow the institutions of our country? There is no such limitation in the Constitution in relation to the Navy? But who has ever feared our Navy? What precedents, what traditions, what prudence, what reason, are there against an adequate Navy?

Then, too, Mr. Chairman, we have thought that we were so peculiarly situated, so politically blessed, that no country would attack us; indeed, that our free institutions, our representative Government, constitute their own defense; that the excellence of our institutions and their virtuous objects were at once our armor and our shield; that democracy is inherently pacific; and that peace is its own defense. Mr. Chairman, is the innocence of the dove a protection against the hawk? Is the pacific temper of the sheep a defense against the wolf? Practical statesmen, dealing with the workings of their own institutions, should think well before embracing utopias. I do not say that in some distant time peace and its methods may not dower the nations of the earth. God speed the day! But, on the contrary, our institutions, as I view them, by their very nature, invite aggression. Democratic republics, free institutions, are a standing affront to power, privilege, and prescription.

For example, about a hundred years ago there sat in Paris three great Nations, known as the Holy Roman Alliance—that was neither holy nor Roman, I may observe in passing—which determined upon the extinction of republican institutions in general and the American Republics in particular. That was the object of the alliance. Everywhere freedom seems to invite tyranny. Therefore we have been long exhorted that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." The manichean struggle seems to go on in the conscience of nations as in the conscience of man. The present distemper of the world is but an evidence of the collision of these forces. We stand appalled at the universal tragedy. Separated, as our country is, from the hot fires of the strife, we look in vain for means to end it. Preachments, parchments, moral asservations, lofty examples, seem but as feathers thrown upon the winds. I believe it was Frederick the Great who said that the meek and the lowly may inherit the kingdom of heaven, but only the daring may take the kingdoms of this earth—rather a concrete reminder of the philosophy that is now playing havoc with so many kingdoms of this earth. Yet I shall not lose hope that the spirit rather than the flesh will finally triumph.

Mr. Chairman, the natural or physical defense interposed by the surrounding oceans is not as great as of former times. Steam, electricity, machinery, and inventions have made these oceans the highways of transportation. The billowy parapets above the floors of the seas no longer restrain or forbid mighty ships. One of the most interesting features of the present war has been the rapidity, certainty, and magnitude with which troops have been moved over great distances across the seas—from Canada to England, from Sydney to Southhampton, from Archangel to Marseille—all having been accomplished at a sacrifice almost negligible. There are estimated to be over a hundred landing places on the Atlantic seaboard of our country comfortably distant from our protected fortifications. So our isolation and ocean barriers no longer stand as our complete defense.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would say that whatever may be our opinions upon the methods of administration, whatever our criticisms of this or that particular means of defense that may be evolved from these three great bills, the Army, the Navy, and the coast fortification bills, that, after all, our Government, as all other Governments, when resting upon the last foundation of sovereignty, the military and naval power, must succeed or fail by virtue of the character of the individual man. So the efforts of those who would instruct and guide public opinion, the prayer of those who would advance American citizenship, should be constantly directed to the development of personal initiative, personal responsibility, personal sense of opportunity, and personal love of country. Back of all preparation is the man. He typifies the American system.

We have grown to be a great Nation with an influence, moral and political, transcendent among the peoples of the earth. Our possessions, material, political, and spiritual, our civilization, must be defended. I dread war; I would resort to it only under the gravest provocation. In my childhood I saw many maimed and wounded, men of my own blood and of my own race. These men had fought valiantly upon a hundred battlefields in my own beloved Commonwealth. They had fought against their own brothers; but they were Americans in their blood and in their bone, Americans truly. Out of this environment, out of this soil, out of this historic tradition, out of this blood and race, there are unnumbered sons eager to answer the call of a great and indestructible Union, a mighty and majestic Nation, and to make effective and victorious its rightful authority on land and on sea. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I intended to ask the gentleman from Kentucky about one matter which I really do not know would have anything to do with this bill or not. The use of gas and liquid fire in war has proved to be of very great value. If my reading teaches me the truth, and I get part of that out of supposed accounts of actual transactions and part of it out of the new novels that deal with events over there—whether they are accurate in any way or not I do not know—but does the gentleman know whether there is any branch of our Government now that is giving any attention at all to the subject of the use of gas and of masks, or whatever they call them, that take care of persons when gas is used?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know whether any study is being made of gas or of liquid fire. There is some study being made of hand grenades and bombs and matters of that kind. I will say to the gentleman if he will notice the title of this bill he will see that it speaks of heavy ordnance. Outside of seacoast fortifications the bill deals only with heavy ordnance for the mobile troops, so that the principal inquiry about which the gentleman speaks will probably find more response from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I did not know but the matter might have been up in the discussion some way.

Mr. SHERLEY. I had no hearings on it, but I have talked privately with some officers about some of these matters to which the gentleman has alluded. I was told the other day that some of the officers are working on hand grenades, and it may be that some interest is being given to the others, but I doubt if any study has been given to the use of poisonous gases or liquid fire.

Mr. MANN. Well, the use of the hand grenade, as I understand, is really the effective way of fighting in the trenches over there after the use of artillery. As to poisonous gases, or whatever they are called—chlorine gas, or things of that sort—they are not hard to produce. People can not live under them unless they have protection, and in all the trenches, of course, they have these masks or protectors. Every soldier, I guess, has one or more. And if we are not giving any attention to it, and I have not heard of any testimony or appropriation in connection with it—if we are not giving any attention to it, I hope somebody will suggest that we have an appropriation in some bill through which it can be given attention.

Mr. SHERLEY. And probably they will on the other bill.

Mr. MANN. I presume so.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suspect that they are waiting for some real information. The impression I gained is that the use of both the gas and liquid fire has been perhaps as damaging to the user as it has been to the enemy.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the gentleman is in error about that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Just the other day I read where liquid fire was attempted to be used, and the men who were in the brigade charging with it stumbled—some of them—and in falling turned the fire upon themselves; and with the gases they suffer frequently if the wind veers.

Mr. MANN. Well, I read the other day about one regiment of Germans firing into another regiment of Germans, and if we were to accept that as an argument it would militate against firing.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not conclusive.

Mr. MANN. No doubt over there a great aid in connection with the firing of guns is the use of gas, which puts men out of business. They are able now to throw it into the trenches.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications for which there may be no special appropriation available, and of structures for the torpedo defense of the United States and for maintaining channels for access to torpedo wharves, $225,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out "$225,000," on page 3, line 2, and insert "$250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 2, by striking out "$225,000" and inserting "$250,000."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, not as a committee amendment, but on my own initiative, and I do it for the following purpose, and therefore I would be glad to have the independent judgment of the Committee of the Whole: This is a maintenance item, and the amount of $225,000 was believed by the committee to be ample for the usual purposes for which the item is intended; but several years ago my attention was attracted to the fact that there are in America a number of historic fortifications, some of them dating back to the Spanish occupation. They are scattered over various parts of America, in various stages of ruin and of decay. This year, as the result of a suggestion of mine a year before, a statement was made to the committee, and is found in the hearings on page 102, as to the number of fortifications and the money that would be requisite to restore and preserve them. By "restoring" I do not mean necessarily restoring them as new, but restoring them to the extent of preventing further decay. The total amount that it would take to do that would be something like $100,000, and there would be after that a small maintenance item of a few thousand dollars annually.

These forts have great historic value. The history of America—the intimate history of America—centers around many of them. We are a young people, too young always to appreciate the value of historical monuments; and it does seem to me that we can afford to make a small expenditure now and in the future looking to the restoration of these old fortifications and their preservation.

I received a letter just the other day from a gentleman writing me about Fort Matanzas, down in Florida, which was a fort that was occupied by the Spaniards over a hundred years ago, and this gentleman in his letter stated that unless something was done it would rapidly go to pieces. That is only one of a number of forts having great historical value.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Take that fort as an illustration. I have seen it. It is covered now by moss, and trees are growing out of it, and it is hanging over the water. What would be done at a fort of that kind?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the statement is that——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it to be made like the old fort at St. Augustine, an object of interest to visitors?

Mr. SHERLEY. The statement shows that an expenditure of $10,000 would be required there. I judge from the amount that what would be done would be to clear away the rubbish, to patch the walls sufficiently to prevent them from further decay, and perhaps to restore enough of the walls to indicate the style and character and period to which the fort belonged, and to put the grounds in reasonable shape.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would mean the appointment of caretakers?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, this property now is owned by the Government, and in some instances these other forts are looked after by the Government. I find a statement that the care and annual maintenance charge of all these forts will amount to a total of $7,000. For that particular fort I find that they figure an annual maintenance charge of $500, which probably would be for a caretaker.

The point I wanted to impress upon the Members of the House is that if they would read over the list of these forts they would notice that they are of real historic interest. For example, there is Fort Constitution, in New Hampshire; Fort Montgomery, on the outlet to Lake Champlain, N. Y.; Fort Niagara, near Youngstown, N. Y.; Fort Ontario, Oswego, N. Y., built in 1755; Fort Mifflin, on the Delaware River, just below Philadelphia; Fort Washington, in Maryland, 11 miles below the city of Washington; Fort Monroe, Va., the old fort near Fortress Monroe; Fort Macon, N. C.; Fort Pulaski, Ga.; Fort Marion, at St. Augustine; Fort Matanzas, Fla., and Fort Redoubt, north of Fort Barrancas, Pensacola, Fla.; old Fort Barrancas, Pensacola, and Fort San Carlos, Pensacola; Fort Morgan and Fort Gaines, in Mobile Harbor, and so on.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think I have been at nearly all of those forts. Most of them would be useless for purposes of defense, but they would be intensely interesting as historic objects or objects of sentimental interest.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are almost all of them useless for purposes of defense. I am offering this suggestion because I believe that every one of them is intimately associated with the history of America.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will pardon me further, then all the gentleman has in mind is to preserve them as landmarks?

Mr. SHERLEY. Precisely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think we can well afford occasionally to stop from the immediately practical and take into consideration things that pertain to sentiment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The idea, then, is to hold them up as object lessons to the people. If that is the idea, I do not object to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that is done, the understanding is that the money will be used in doing the most pressing work necessary on those old fortifications.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Of the $225,000 provided in the bill, is it intended that any of that amount is to be used for the purpose outlined?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. That is to take care of the existing fortifications that are a part of the defense of the country.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that the gentleman from Kentucky offers his amendment with a view to having the sum used for the purpose of repairing these old fortifications?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. The additional sum is intended for that purpose?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to have any new language in order to indicate to the department that that is the purpose, or will this discussion serve that purpose?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think this debate will clearly indicate that, and, as a matter of fact, I talked with the engineer officers in regard to the matter.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is Crown Point, N. Y., included in that list?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not see it under that name.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know which of the several names that it has borne during the period of its use it may now be called by; but the ruins there are in splendid shape, and they show a fortress of 200 years ago in very satisfactory fashion.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was told a few days ago of a fort, the building of which changed the boundary of the United States. It was built supposedly on United States soil, but after it was built it was found that it was on Canadian soil, and in order to adjust the matter it was necessary to have it submitted to arbitration. I am not sure what king acted as arbitrator, but he finally held that, inasmuch as it had been built in good faith, supposedly upon the soil of the United States, it should be considered as belonging to them, and the boundary was changed to that extent.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That was Fort Montgomery on Lake Champlain, was it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not positive now as to the fort. I remember the incident.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It stands up on the water's edge, just like the woodcut pictures in our old histories.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. MANN. I thought this was something that was to be attended to by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The question was taken, and the amendment of Mr. SHERLEY was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 3, after line 2, insert, as a new paragraph, the following:

"For the restoration of sea walls, retaining walls and fill, and for urgent repairs to batteries in the defenses of Galveston, Tex., $303,500."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the estimate for this work was sent to the committee after the hearings had been closed but before the bill had been finally reported. We considered it informally, and when the bill was up before the full committee I was authorized, on behalf of the committee, to offer the amendment. It is made necessary because of the storm which occurred at Galveston some months ago.

The committee will recall that in connection with the river and harbor bill a discussion was had touching improvements at Galveston, and a provision was carried in that bill to make various improvements. They, however, had no direct relation to the improvements here necessary, though when made they will be of value to the fortifications that are there.

The details of this amount are as follows:

At Fort Travis, for urgent repairs to sea walls, $12,000; for urgent repairs to batteries, $5,200; total, $17,200.

At Fort Crockett, repairs and replacement of sea walls, retaining walls, and fill, $276,000; urgent repairs to batteries, $3,000; total, $279,000,

At Fort San Jacinto, for urgent repairs to batteries, $7,300; grand total. $303,500.

The letter which I have from the War Department states that the fortifications at Galveston were planned some 20 years ago and were located on what was apparently at that time a practically unchanging sand flat, and in order to bring the batteries as close as possible to their targets they were located only a short distance landward of the high-water line. Subsequent to this time the beach was eaten away, and when, as a result of the storm damage, construction of sea walls was deemed essential, it was found to be necessary to locate the sea walls practically on the lines of the batteries, running from the concrete work of one battery to the concrete work of another battery. Sea walls have been built at Fort Crockett, west of Galveston, and at Fort Travis, on the east side of the entrance to the harbor, but none have as yet been built at Fort San Jacinto, which is on the west side of the entrance; and though it is probable that a sea wall may be required ultimately at Fort San Jacinto, none is considered absolutely essential at the present time, and no estimate for this is included in the figures above.

During the storm in August last damage was done to all the batteries by flooding, the loss of sand parapets and other injuries, and in the estimate now submitted is included the cost of making emergency repairs only to these batteries, so that they may be used for drill; and in case war should break out before more modern batteries are completed the older batteries might still be used, being given to additional sandbag protection necessary to make their magazines safe in case of bombardment.

The remainder of the estimate consists of the cost of repairing the damage done by the storm to these walls, and so forth, partly at Fort Travis, but the larger part of the estimate is for repairing the damage done to the Fort Crockett Reservation. Here the damage was considerable. A vessel was blown ashore right over the sea wall. A part of the riprap protection outside of the wall was washed away, exposing the foundation piling. The riprap retaining walls on the north side and the end of the reservation were seriously damaged, and a considerable part of the fill in the reservation was also removed.

It is stated that the repair of this damage to the Fort Crockett Reservation is absolutely essential. The letter is signed by W. M. Black, Chief of Engineers.

In this connection it is proper that I should state that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] who represents the Galveston district has been much interested in seeing that this matter was properly cared for, and he wired me yesterday that unfortunately he was detained in Minnesota, owing to the illness of his wife, and he trusted that the matter would not be overlooked.

This amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state whether any dredging is contemplated in this appropriation?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not, except such as is essential to the making of the fill. The detail does not show it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman states, there was a somewhat spirited controversy over this Galveston wall proposition when it came up in the discussion of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is some fill there, so there will probably be some dredging in order to make the fill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman has drawn his amendment, it pertains only to the restoration of the sea wall, as I understand it?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the amendment reads—

For the repair and restoration of sea walls, retaining walls and fill, and for urgent repairs to batteries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "And fill."

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but I will say to the gentleman that this is not expected to supplement, nor does it bear a direct relationship to what was done in the river and harbor bill. Whether that was done or not, this must be done if we are to preserve the batteries that are there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It pertains solely to the restoration of the Government property?

Mr. SHERLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And does not pertain to the dredging of the channel to obtain the proper depth and such work as should be done in the river and harbor bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it has no reference to anything except the purposes stated in the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman knows, the river and harbor bill had rather rough sledding, and was criticized severely when it undertook to take jurisdiction of matters of this kind. There have been several instances—one in the naval bill, and others—where items should have gone legitimately to the Rivers and Harbors Committee; but I see that the amendment as drawn confines the work to the reconstruction of Government property.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and repair of searchlights and electric light and power equipment for seacoast fortifications, and for tools, electrical and other supplies, and appliances to be used in their operation, including the purchase of reserve lights, $40,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We met at 11 o'clock this morning, and I suppose we will also begin at 11 o'clock to-morrow. We had an understanding that during these sparse days we would adjourn early.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no desire to unduly detain the committee, and I am suffering a little from lumbago myself. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14303, the fortification appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. IGOE, by unanimus consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 20360, Sixty-first Congress, providing for enrollment as a Cherokee, Isabel Cook, née Bell Richter, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman enter the motion and let it go over? The gentleman, under the rules, can call it up hereafter unless the bill has gone to the Senate, and if it has he should ask to have it recalled.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I am informed that it has not gone to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will this motion that I have just entered for reconsideration of the bill H. R. 15158 be in order to-morrow?

Mr. MANN. It might be in order, but the gentleman does not want to take it up until there is a full House.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I wanted to know the status of it.

Mr. MANN. It holds up further proceedings on the bill.

The SPEAKER. And it comes up whenever the gentleman wants to bring it up or the House wants to consider it.

TUESDAY, June 13, 1916.

Rev. Boyd V. Switzer, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we rejoice that Thou art interested in the affairs and concerns of men and of nations and that Thy providential care and blessings have been of a very peculiar sort to us as a people. Therefore as we enter upon the duties and responsibilities of the day we lift our hearts to Thee, the source of our inspiration and our help, praying for Thy guidance and trusting that continual grace and providence that has followed us through all these years that we may indeed prove ourselves to be workmen of whom God needeth not be ashamed. Also that we may be a blessing to this great country that Thou hast honored us with a place in. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

JOSEPH A. BUCKHOLDT.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Claims on the bill (H. R. 2536) for the relief of Joseph A. Buckholdt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that the unanimous-consent agreement does not provide for the presentation or acceptance of reports from committees.

Mr. LANE. I thought such a report would be merely tentative, and that it might lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator that it would be better to withdraw the report.

Mr. LANE. If I may be permitted, I will withdraw the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report is withdrawn.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6346) granting an increase of pension to Alice Hathaway (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 6347) granting an increase of pension to John Hawksley; to the Committee on Pensions.

JUDGES AND ELECTIVE OFFICES.

Mr. THOMAS. I introduce a joint resolution, and as it is short I ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 142) to amend the Constitution of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That Article III, section 1, of the Constitution be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

Article III.

"SEC. 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges both of the Supreme and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

"No judge of the Supreme Court or of any inferior court now or hereafter ordained and established shall, during his continuance in office, or for a period of two years after such continuance, be qualified for or eligible to any elective office under the Constitution and laws of the United States."

This amendment shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,500 for the purchase of additional land adjoining the present station for extension of pond system, etc., at the fish hatchery, Edenton, N. C., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 15836), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $750,000 to enlarge the dry dock at the navy yard, Charleston, S. C., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that section 1212 of the Revised Statutes shall hereafter apply to the Navy in the same manner that it now applies to the Army, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

FLOOD CONTROL.

Mr. BROUSSARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14777) providing for the control of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Cal., and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED DEPARTMENT OF MANUFACTURE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I submit a resolution and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 213) was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the further development of manufacturing processes is one of the most important and powerful means of increasing the Nation's efficiency, wealth, and prosperity: and

Whereas departments of the Government are now devoted to agriculture, commerce, and labor but so far no department has been established for manufacture, the other fundamental source of national progress: and

Whereas there is a wide field for the making of useful articles by hand, and without machinery, a field which should have especial study: and

Whereas the distribution of knowledge among the people as to the practicability of conducting manufacturing processes, both with and without machinery, on the cooperative plan and otherwise will open up new channels of popular occupation and achievement: and

Whereas the adaptation of modern machinery to small factories in rural districts, villages, small towns, and in the home itself will open up an avenue of economic independence of incomparable value to the people: and

Whereas the farm is of itself a factory, and its higher profits and possibilities will be unrealized until its processes are carried to the finished state within its own limits or as near thereto as practicable; and

Whereas one of the principal needs of the United States is the conversion of its raw materials into finished products within its own boundaries, it being a source of national shame that we ship such enormous quantities of our basic raw material abroad to be made by foreign countries into finished products and resold by them to us and others at a great profit: and

Whereas the conversion of raw material into finished products should be effected as near the place of production as may be consistent with access to markets for finished products: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures is hereby authorizes and directed to investigat· the practicability of establishing a department of manufacture, at the seat of government, for the purpose of studying manufacture in all its forms and diffusing information relating thereto among the people of the United States.

The said committee is hereby authorized and directed to report to Congress the result of its investigation on the opening of Congress in December, 1916, and if the committee finds such a department desirable, to submit a plan and bill to Congress therefor, the expense of said investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IN IRELAND (S. DOC. NO. 462).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on June 2, 1916, requesting him to "cause inquiry to be made as to the safety and well-being of American citizens in Ireland, and what steps, if any, may be necessary and proper, consistently with the recognized law of nations, for the safeguarding and protection of their lives and property."

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 13, 1916.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On June 9, 1916:

S. 4856. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

On June 12, 1916:

S. 6073. An act granting the consent of Congress to George Fabyan to construct a bridge across the Fox River.

CREEK INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) withholding from allotment the unallotted lands or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians and providing for the sale thereof, and for other purposes, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed by the Senate June 3, 1916.

I enter this motion by request, and desire that it lie on the table. I make it at this time because, as I understand, it must be made now in order to be permissible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont enters a motion, which will lie on the table.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to ask what the motion is. I did not hear it.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the votes whereby on June 3, 1916, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) withholding from allotment the unallotted lands or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians and providing for the sale thereof, and for other purposes, was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MYERS. I ask what purpose is sought to be accomplished by the joint resolution? I did not catch what the Senator from Vermont said.

Mr. PAGE. I can read a statement to the Senator in regard to the matter if he desires. I only ask now that the motion to reconsider be entered in order that it may be made in time.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to have the Senator read the statement to which he refers.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the last paragraph of the joint resolution as amended by the Senate provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay each and every duly enrolled citizen of the Creek Nation who has not been allotted lands in said nation and who is not included in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, second session, the sum of $1,040, in lieu of an allotment of land in said nation. Said sum of $1,040 to be paid to each and every person out of the funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Muskogee Creek Nation.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Vermont for reading the paragraph from the joint resolution. I did not understand the matter from his first statement. Personally I have no more interest in it than has any other Senator. I merely wish to know if, under the unanimous-consent agreement, it is permissible to make a motion of this kind, and I ask the opinion of the Chair on that proposition.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know the proper construction of the unanimous-consent agreement; but I do not think I ought to be foreclosed from entering the motion, as it must be entered at this time in order to be seasonable and to come within the rule. I merely enter the motion, and ask that it lie on the table until it may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Vermont that he should couple with the motion a request that the joint resolution be returned from the House of Representatives.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the request be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, without objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not understand that it is permissible at all for the Senate to take any action on the matter. All that can be done is to enter the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed, and request that the joint resolution be returned to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Florida that the Senator from Vermont does not ask for any action on the motion, but the Senate may request the House to return the joint resolution. Inasmuch as the Senate is authorized to receive messages from the House, it certainly is entitled to communicate with the House upon any question before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a statement, and have it entered in the RECORD at this time as my individual view, that the motion of the Senator from Vermont is not within the purview and scope of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana misunderstands the request of the Senator from Vermont. He does not make the motion to reconsider; he simply gives notice that he will hereafter make the motion, so as to come within the rule.

Mr. MYERS. I do not believe that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator can do that, but I will merely content myself with the expression of my individual opinion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the Senator from Vermont may properly do as he has done.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to know the construction the Chair puts upon the unanimous-consent agreement as to whether or not the Chair is authorized to sign bills which have passed both Houses. I understand some important bills have passed both the Senate and the House and are now on the Vice President's desk awaiting his signature as enrolled bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is too late for the Chair to decide that question, because he has already been signing bills of that character.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was not aware of that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if there be no further business, I move that the Senate adjourn until Friday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, June 16, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 13, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, Creator, Upholder, Sustainer of all, rich are the endowments of life, strange are its vicissitudes. We know not how or why, but we pray for faith to sustain us, light to guide us, and a willingness to do the right as it appears to us, that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in all our hearts. And pæans of praise we will ever give to Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the pending fortification appropriation bill I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the fortification appropriation bill he be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think the fortification bill will be concluded in about two hours.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is no telling when the bill will be completed. If we finish the bill at a reasonable hour, I shall have no objection whatever.

Mr. BORLAND. I feel very certain that the bill will be concluded in two hours.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not tell anything about it.

Mr. BORLAND. If it should be too late in the afternoon, I would not want to detain the House.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman ought to be willing to wait and see.

Mr. BORLAND. I thought it would be well to have the consent at this time.

Mr. MANN. Where consent is granted to one it is very difficult to refuse it to others, and I turn down some on this side of the House nearly every day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

"THE REAL WILSON."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed therein an article appearing in the New York Times of Sunday last by Maximilian Harden on "The real Wilson."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an article appearing in the New York Times of Sunday last by Maximilian Harden, entitled "The real Wilson." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14303, the fortification appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the fortification appropriation bill, with Mr. HOUSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of mining casemates, cable galleries, torpedo storehouses, cable tanks, and other structures necessary for the operation, preservation, and care of submarine mines and their accessories, and for providing channels for access to torpedo wharves, $200,000.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, it would be impossible to build fortifications that would cover and protect every part of our great coast line, and it is not necessary to do so. They must be confined to the most important and to the most strategic points along the coast, the selection of which should be left to our Army and Navy experts. We are mere amateurs, and we must leave these problems to the determination of trained minds. Many years ago these experts selected the entrance to the Chesapeake Bay as one of the strategic points that ought to be fortified, and, following their advice, the Government purchased the necessary land on Cape Henry for this purpose. Unfortunately, there has been much delay in providing for these defenses. I am glad this bill makes provision for the commencement of this work. The work should now be completed with the utmost dispatch. Whether considered from the standpoint of economy or national safety, it would be a great mistake to longer delay it. Such a strategic point, offering to an enemy such great advantages and facilities and such a treasure of supplies when unfortified is an open invitation for an invasion to any country with which we might be at war. It is foolish to assume that an enemy would not take advantage of its lack of proper defense. Such advantage has been taken heretofore, and we have suffered the consequences. It is perilous to longer trust to chance for its successful defense against hostile attack. We should make at once ample provision for its proper fortification.

All of our ablest and most experienced Army and Navy experts have strongly recommended it as a military necessity. And all of our most prominent laymen who have been sufficiently interested in matters of national defense to make a fair investigation of the proposition have concurred in that recommendation.

Former President Taft, in an article on "Our national defense," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post June 5, 1915, used the following language:

Now, it is a great satisfaction to be able to say that, except with respect to one or two features which can be readily supplied, our coast fortifications are entirely adequate for every office that any coast fortifications have in modern warfare. Indeed it is not too much to say that they are as extensive and defensive as any coast fortifications in the world. There is only one important place where we need an additional fort, and that is at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay. The great cities of Norfolk, Baltimore, and Washington are protected by local fortifications, but we do need a fort built at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay to cover the passage between Cape Henry and Cape Charles, in order that the Chesapeake may never again be used by an enemy, to our great disadvantage, as it has been in the past.

The Endicott Board, in its report made in 1896, over 20 years ago, strongly urged the importance of coast defenses at the entrance to the Chesapeake Bay. The National Defense Board, commonly called the Taft Board, a joint board of Army and Navy officers appointed to make recommendations relative to our seacoast defenses, submitted its report in 1905, over 10 years ago, and in regard to the locality under discussion made the following statement:

Commercially and strategically Chesapeake Bay is to-day, as it always has been, of the very first importance. With the entrance as it now is, unfortified, a hostile fleet, should it gain control at sea, can establish, without coming under fire of a single gun, a base on its shores, pass in and out at pleasure, have access to large quantities of valuable supplies of all kinds, and paralyze the great trunk lines crossing the head of the bay.

Under date of January 11, 1911, Gen. Leonard Wood, then Chief of Staff, United States Army, wrote to me, in part, as follows:

In reply to your letter of January 9 relative to an appropriation for the fortification of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay, I have only to inform you that the fortification of that entrance is regarded by this department as a matter of military necessity.

In a letter dated March 11, 1912, to Hon. George C. Perkins, then chairman of the Senate subcommittee in charge of the general fortification bill, Gen. W. H. Bixby, then Chief of Engineers, United States Army, wrote as follows:

The views expressed by the Taft Board are, so far as the information in this office goes, concurred in by all the military authorities who deem the closure of the entrance to the Chesapeake Bay to be the most important coast-defense project yet to be undertaken and deem it of such importance that they believe it should be undertaken without further delay. Fortifications at Cape Henry are necessary to the closure of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay and to Hampton Roads and all other tributary waters, and, as previously stated, there is no doubt in the minds of the military authorities that the entrance to the Chesapeake must be fortified.

The Army and Navy experts now connected with the department have recommended this fortification in the very strongest terms and have urged the importance of beginning its immediate construction.

Expert testimony relative to the importance of fortifications at this point could not be stronger, and to those who are willing to rely on their judgment it would hardly be necessary to give the reasons which influenced them in reaching their conclusions. However, I have decided to state briefly some of the reasons which doubtless forced them to make their recommendations.

The entrance from the ocean into Chesapeake Bay lies between Cape Henry and Cape Charles. The main ship channel is less than 3 miles in width and is on the Cape Henry side. This channel must be followed by all ocean-going steamships and large battleships, and is the sole gateway to Hampton Roads and Chesapeake Bay, and the Chesapeake Bay, as was well said by the Taft Board, is "commercially and strategically of the very first importance."

And why commercially important?

If there could have been any doubt about it, the present European war has clearly demonstrated its commercial importance. The exports from the port of Hampton Roads alone have very largely increased during the fiscal year 1915. Hampton Roads had its first real opportunity to bid for this trade on a real basis of natural position and even competition, without the interference of railroads and shipping companies favoring other ports, and the result has been that its exports have increased in round numbers from $24,997,055 in 1914 to $123,896,910 in 1915. In 1916 this commerce will show a still larger increase.

Within this entrance and tributary to Hampton Roads and Chesapeake Bay there are more than 12 navigable rivers, "and more than 700 miles of water navigable for vessels of 17 or 18 feet draft, 550 miles of which are navigable for vessels of 20 feet draft; more than 425 miles for ships drawing 25 feet; and nearly 400 miles for ships of 30 feet draft and over," to say nothing of the smaller tributary streams that can be used by smaller vessels. The annual commerce of these streams, navigated by the largest domestic and foreign steamships exceeds 60,000,000 tons, valued at nearly two and one-half billions of dollars. And located on these streams are the great cities of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Newport News, Richmond, and Baltimore, connected by thousands of miles of railroad lines with every large commercial center in the United States, and also the city of Washington, the Capital of the Nation, to say nothing of Annapolis and the Naval Academy, on which the Government has expended millions of dollars. No other part of our great coast line offers so many advantages and facilities for the transportation by rail and water, of fuel, ammunition, supplies, and foodstuffs of every kind. No other part of it presents, in the hands of an enemy, such an opportunity for the destruction of so many lines of communication, so much commerce, and so many large cities. And yet, with Cape Henry unfortified, as it is to-day, these vast commercial and property interests are unprotected, and might be destroyed by a hostile fleet, should it gain control at sea.

And why strategically important?

This entrance between the capes is the gateway to the most strategic base of operations on the Atlantic coast, and the only one from which, if Cape Henry is fortified, an expedition can fit out in absolute security. With this gateway closed, the Chesapeake Bay and Hampton Roads, always considered of the very first importance in every plan for our national defense, can be made of still greater strategic value. The "Flying Squadron" lay in Hampton Roads until it was needed during the Spanish-American War. It was in Hampton Roads that our fleet was assembled for its cruise around the world. It is reasonable to expect that from Hampton Roads, should our country ever again become involved in war, on the Atlantic seaboard, our fleet will again be dispatched.

It is here that we find our Navy's safest and finest harbor, and one which can easily receive every ship of the American Navy, including the entire fleet and all its auxiliaries. It is here that we have the best place of refuge and shelter on the coast, not only for our naval vessels, but also for commercial shipping, foreign and domestic.

We have no other place so easily reached that affords equal facilities for the docking and repairing of the ships of the Navy, and no other place at which, when reached, such ships can be more promptly docked and repaired, either at the Government-owned yard at Portsmouth or at the extensive shipbuilding plant at Newport News, and then more quickly supplied with coal and ammunition, provisioned, and prepared again for active service.

Hampton Roads is the great clearing house of the fleet for coal. More than 50 per cent of the coal consumed for naval purposes is delivered to our ships and vessels from the great terminal coaling points on Hampton Roads. In time of war still more coal would be needed for the use of our naval vessels, and it could readily be supplied.

At the Government magazine at St. Juliene, on the Southern Branch of the Elizabeth River, large quantities of ammunition, valued at many millions of dollars, are assembled, stored, prepared, and kept constantly on hand for the use of the ships of the Navy.

At St. Helena, just across the river from the navy yard, the Government has erected large oil tanks, from which our vessels can be promptly supplied with oil, and just a short distance down the river one of the big oil companies of the country has located one of its largest storage depots.

Splendid rail and water transportation facilities make possible the quick assembling here from any part of the country of troops and munitions of war, and, if necessary, their speedy dispatch to any other section. Quick communication by rail and water with the largest supply centers of the country has made it one of the Navy's greatest depots for stores and supplies of all kinds. With Chesapeake Bay properly fortified, the largest ships of our Navy can here renew their supplies of coal, munitions, and other necessaries, in a protected harbor, without being exposed to fire from the guns of an enemy.

In time of peace Hampton Roads is always a place of the greatest activity. If war should come, it can hardly be doubted that Chesapeake Bay and Hampton Roads would soon become the country's greatest war base.

It has been well said that the chief military purposes of coast fortifications are "to defend against naval attack upon coast cities and harbors and to prevent the landing of expeditionary forces at a place that could be made a protected base of operations for an invasion of the country and to afford a place of refuge to our commercial shipping, for the repair of the ships after a battle, and for renewing their supplies of fuel and ammunition." All of these purposes will be accomplished by the fortification of the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay, and, in addition, the greatest stretch of inland water on our entire coast, the place where we can quickly assemble and distribute supplies of all kinds for the Army and Navy, can be preserved.

Behind protection, the great advantages of the bay and of the roads will be a source of strength, but without protection they will become a source of weakness. With the bay and Hampton Roads in control of a hostile fleet, where, south of New York, could our ships be sent to be docked and repaired, and where would they be driven to seek coal, ammunition, provisions, and shelter? What other part of our great coast line involves the protection of so many advantages and facilities, and yet what other part of it, admittedly so important, is so inadequately protected?

When the Atlantic Fleet was called upon in the mimic war of last June to protect the Atlantic seaboard the "enemy" fleet accomplished its purpose in effecting a landing on the shores of the Chesapeake Bay. Might not a hostile fleet be equally successful, and if successful, who can estimate the loss? One of the main purposes of defenses at Cape Henry will be to prevent just such a landing and the use of these waters to our great disadvantage.

And if a hostile fleet should control these waters it could command with its guns the peninsulas on either side of the bay and could make either one of these peninsulas a protected base of operations for the invasion of the country. Our own military forces would have to be divided in order to protect each separate peninsula, and, pending the training and mobilization of a larger army, might not be sufficiently strong to prevent the infliction of serious damage. Why longer subject the country to such a risk when it can be so easily avoided? The National Defense Board believed we should close this entrance, and for that reason urged the importance of fortifications at Cape Henry. These experts knew that the Chesapeake Bay, unprotected, would be a source of weakness, and protected, would be a source of strength.

How should it be fortified?

The importance—

Said a committee headed by Gen. John P. Storey, United States Army, in a report to the Secretary of the Navy—of securing the entrance of the Chesapeake Bay at Cape Henry as an outer line of defense for Baltimore, Washington, Newport News, Norfolk, and the great railroads crossing the Susquehanna River can not be exaggerated and was recognized in the report of the Endicott Board. Any expenditure, however great, is justifiable for the protection of such vast interests.

No expense, therefore, should be spared which may be necessary to make this gateway to the Chesapeake and to Hampton Roads impassable. It should be equipped with the most modern and most powerful guns, of sufficient strength and range to cover the entire entrance, and these guns should be so well manned that they could when necessary be efficiently used. It should be made impassable so that the facilities and advantages of which I have spoken could not be seized by an enemy, but might be protected and preserved for our own use. It should be made impassable so that fewer battleships would have to be tied, for its protection, to that one locality, and a larger number could be used for the defense of the cities and harbors located at places on our coast line that can not be so easily protected. It should be made impassable so that we can have at least one base from which expeditions can fit out in absolute security, where men, ammunition, and supplies of all kinds can easily be assembled, and where disabled vessels can be repaired and new vessels constructed out of range of the guns of an enemy. It should be made impassable so that no foreign fleet can ever again establish a base on its shores, destroy its commerce, partly burn the Capitol of the Nation, or bombard some city located on the bay or its tributaries. Any expenditure, however great, for such purposes, will be justifiable, and will have the approval of the American people. And the expenditure, when made, will be for the protection of the entire country. The cities of my district are protected now, and these defenses are primarily needed for the protection of Washington and the Chesapeake Bay.

Our experts have repeatedly warned us that the fortification of Cape Henry is a military necessity, and that when these fortifications are constructed they will protect not local interests merely but will be a much needed and long-delayed additional provision for the defense of our country. Surely such defenses will protect against successful attack the most vulnerable, as well as the most strategic, point on the entire coast. Shall we heed the warning of all of our experts or shall we, as we have done in the past, refuse to follow their advice and blindly trust to chance for the protection of that great stretch of inland water which forms the first consideration in every plan relating to our national defense?

I am fully convinced that it would be a great blunder to longer delay the work, and probably un-American to refuse to vote for any appropriations necessary to make these defenses impassable and impregnable. Any other course would favor a foolish sense of security, which has no substantial foundation. Any other course would show an indifference to our safety which would be almost criminal.

I am glad, as I have stated, that this bill carries an initial appropriation for this work. I hope it will be followed by others until we have completed at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay the strongest coast defenses on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky some questions about this item for information. We have a torpedo station on Puget Sound. I presume that in this lump sum will be found such sums as they think necessary to expend in relation to that station.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I recall, there is nothing that they asked in connection with the mine equipment for Puget Sound at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not think the gentleman quite understands the question.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think I do.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I wanted to know if in this item was included whatever they consider to be necessary to care for that station? It is the only one I find in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. This is a preservation and operation item, and it would take care of whatever was necessary at all of the stations.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is what I supposed, as I do not find it anywhere else, and I wanted to know, because I understood there was some work there that they were anxious to have done. I supposed it was taken care of in this item.

Mr. SHERLEY. They did not ask for anything special in connection with the mine fields at Puget Sound, as I recollect. There was nothing presented and nothing urged in the hearings. Later on there is contemplated the installation of additional armament in connection with Puget Sound. The board of review in passing upon the fortifications there indicated the desirability of placing certain additional fortifications, but they did not urge it as the same importance as other items which are carried in the bill; but under the scheme which has been adopted all of those matters should be taken care of in a legislative way within the period of the next four years.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want some information in regard to the next item when we reach it; but under this particular item, as I suggested, I have taken it for granted that whatever they consider necessary in relation to this station will be taken care of. I looked through the bill, and this is the only one that I have found.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, everything that was asked touching this matter was allowed by the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. And will be taken care of in the $200,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Everything that was asked by the department was granted.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is all I care to ask at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article published in La Follette's Magazine on the Seamen's Act and Safety at Sea.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting in the RECORD the article to which he refers. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have no desire to interfere in this matter, but yesterday, when I made a request to extend my remarks on a matter not pertaining to the bill, I was told it must be done in the House. I would like to understand the procedure in matters of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the usual practice in that matter is that permission of that sort should be granted in the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Without intending to give the gentleman unnecessary trouble, I object at the present time, because what is fair for one is fair for all in matters of this kind. I was denied the right to extend my remarks yesterday under similar circumstances.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me to make a suggestion to him, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as I recall, desired to extend his remarks on the interpleader bill. If he had obtained consent in the committee and his remarks had been inserted, they would have been inserted under the consideration of the fortification bill; but if he had obtained the consent in the House and his remarks were inserted, they should have been and will be inserted, I take it, in the consideration of the interpleader bill, if that is where he desires to have them. He could have inserted his remarks by permission here, but they would have been in the consideration of the fortification bill. That is the distinction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to make this straightforward statement. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman from Illinois has in mind. I am also in sympathy with the thought that we ought to stop too much extending remarks in the RECORD. On yesterday the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] arose and made the request to extend his remarks by inserting a statement made by Mr. Justice Hughes when he was governor of New York. That permission was granted. Now, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is right the remarks of the governor of New York extended by Mr. HARRISON should have gone in with the proceedings of the day, whereas, as a matter of fact, they appear in the back of the RECORD, just as my extension of remarks appears by permission in the House. I agree that these extensions of remarks should not appear in the course of the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be permitted to say this. I thought it had been the custom with Members to ask the right to extend remarks on other matters in the Committee of the Whole. If I had not been under that impression, I surely would not have disturbed the proceedings by asking unanimous consent to extend these remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that this request should properly be made in the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that these requests are made in the House and in the Committee of the Whole, but if in the Committee of the Whole unanimous consent is given, why, the matter would be printed under the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If that is the proper procedure, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One more question, Mr. Chairman, and it is a parliamentary question. If consent is granted, would it be proper, then, to insert what the gentleman desires to insert in the course of the proceedings of to-day, or should it appear at the back of the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would think the proper place to insert it would be in the proceedings of the committee while in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As the remarks do not pertain at all to what is going on in the committee, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

The Clerk read as follows:

For procurement or reclamation of land, or right pertaining thereto, needed for site, location, construction, or prosecution of works for fortifications and coast defenses, $1,400,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, this item is an item intended to procure certain land at San Francisco, at Los Angeles—that is, San Pedro—and at New York, at Rockaway Beach. Touching the latter I think that a statement should be made to the committee. It has always been the custom, and a proper custom, to carry items of this kind in lump sums, without designating the particular locality or the amount of land that is to be acquired, and the reason for it is very apparent. In the absence of an actual contract touching the purchase price which is satisfactory, any designation of price in a legislative bill would make difficult the obtaining of the property for a sum less than that named in the bill. The practice has been for the department to indicate the land that is desired, the reason why it is desired, and for the committee to exercise its judgment as to whether it should be acquired or not and, in a general way, as to the amount that should be paid, leaving to the department the actual securing of the land on the most favorable terms possible. The right of the Government to condemn exists and may always be exercised, and, in the event that the property is not offered at a fair price, should be exercised.

One of the disappointing experiences that comes to every man who deals with questions of this kind is to find that the patriotism of men, very vociferously proclaimed in a general way, usually stops short when it comes to something that they have to sell and which the Government needs to buy, and in every instance——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose.

Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment—and in every instance where it is possible the Government is mulcted in excessive price for the property that it desires.

Now, in connection with the Rockaway Beach property I desire to say this:

The committee has received a number of communications from Mr. L. B. Sharp, of Far Rockaway, a real estate dealer there, who claims that the option which has been given to the Government for this property is at a price greatly in excess of the real value of the land, and that there will be an attempt to cause the Government to pay an extravagant price, just as he claims the city of New York was forced to pay for a park that adjoins that. He charges, in substance, that there is a real estate ring that has been given to the practice of holding up the city government, and now proposes to hold up the United States Government, to get an unfair profit. The particular land was chosen for the sole reason of its location and the desirability of having that particular land is not questioned by anyone familiar with the facts and the needs from a military standpoint. The option which has been given is an option which was given under terms of secrecy. The owner of the property, the real owner of the property, is the Southern Pacific Railway. The title is held by a corporation, a subsidiary corporation, controlled by that railway. The option provides for a price that is contended by the owner to be fair and to be about what was paid under condemnation proceedings when adjoining property was condemned by the city of New York. But inasmuch as there is now a lawsuit pending between the owners of this company and the city and State of New York, touching the rights to certain property that is below high water, the actual terms of the option are held secret on the ground that it might have an effect upon pending litigation.

But the provision in the option provides that the Government shall not have to pay for any of the land that is in dispute between the railway company and the city and State authorities. It has been suggested by the gentleman representing that district that a limitation should be put upon this provision limiting the price per acre that should be paid for this land and that it should not be bought at a greater price than that. I personally do not believe that that should be done. It is of the highest importance that this land should be acquired and acquired at the earliest practical date. If we are to undertake the permanent fortification contemplated for New York at Rockaway we must obtain title to this land.

I shall have read from the Clerk's desk in a moment the letter of Mr. Sharp, written to the Attorney General of the United States, which embodies all of the facts from his standpoint and makes reference to other letters sent to Mr. FITZGERALD, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the reading of those letters unnecessary. The only way that I believe it is practicable to deal with this subject is to leave to the War Department and to the Department of Justice the procurement of this land at a price that will be fair to the Government of the United States. If there is a conspiracy on foot to boost the price of this land, if real estate men have been retained in advance to testify as to its value, the Department of Justice and the War Department ought to be able, and I believe will be able, to expose that situation, and if a fair price is refused to the Government in condemnation proceedings before a jury that will be honestly chosen and will honestly perform its duty to obtain the land at a fair price, and certainly if we can not by condemnation proceedings obtain justice for the Government, then we are helpless.

And I repeat again that it is exceedingly painful to have constantly recurring evidences of the selfishness of men and of corporations touching matters of the first magnitude to the Government and the safety of the Government. But I believe to undertake now to fix an arbitrary price for the land that is to be bought would be to do something that we are not sufficiently advised about to do intelligently, and which might result in the postponement for a year or more of the procurement of this land.

I personally went over to Rockaway Beach and visited the land. I did that in my private capacity, because I had no way of going in an official capacity. I believed it was important that some one should have a personal view of the exact situation. The land as land would be worth practically nothing. It is a sand dune. But the land by virtue of its proximity to New York and the settlement that is going on there in the way of small suburban houses, put up on practically city lots, makes the land very valuable considering its general nature. I want the committee particularly to have knowledge of this situation. I want particularly by these remarks to call the attention of the Department of Justice and the War Department to what is being alleged and to again say that it is incumbent upon those departments in the expenditure of such portion of this sum as may be necessary to acquire that land, to protect the Government and obtain it at a fair price.

The original amount of land which it was thought was necessary to purchase I do not believe is necessary, and I think the view I express is now shared in a large measure by the department. It was originally thought desirable to obtain land fronting on both Jamaica Bay and the Atlantic Ocean. That would have added very greatly to the cost, and inasmuch as we have now a certain small strip of land owned by the United States Government and occupied by the Coast Guard Survey, which would give us a wharf and entrance upon Jamaica Bay, it does not seem necessary to acquire all the land from the Atlantic Ocean back to the bay, but a strip, indicated by the red area upon the map that was submitted in connection with the option, would be sufficient for all the purposes in connection with the fortification.

I now ask to have read from the Clerk's desk this letter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman if he thinks this language is broad enough to authorize the condemnation proceedings?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is not any doubt about that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The language is "for procurement or reclamation of land."

Mr. SHERLEY. This is the language that has always been carried in the fortification bill, and is the language under which the condemnation proceedings were had down at Cape Henry. There is no question about it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I agree with the gentleman that we ought to have condemnation proceedings when the Government is to be held up.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no doubt about it under this language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

APRIL 22, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS W. GREGORY,
Attorney General, United States,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: With reference to the land at Rockaway Point to be acquired by the Federal Government for mounting coast-defense guns, and upon which the Government has taken an option, I inclose herewith copies of four letters I have written dealing with this subject under dates March 29, April 8, April 12, and April 15, 1916, to chairman of House committee, Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, M. C., Hon. CHAS. POPE CALD-

WELL, M. C., and William M. Greve, of the Realty Associates, Brooklyn, N. Y., respectively, all of which you will find self-explanatory, and when taken together should give you a clear understanding of the object I am endeavoring to attain, viz, the exposure and defeat of a scheme on the part of William M. Greve and his associates, as representatives of the owners of this property, to mulct the Government.

I lay before you this information in an effort to convince you that there are reasonable grounds for this, my solemn protest against the exercise of the option held by the Government upon this land. I am making this protest purely and simply in the interests of the Government and in an earnest effort to discharge what seems to me the plain duty of any and every citizen to whose notice may come wrongdoing of the sort, and I am doing it in all probability to my great personal disadvantage, for there are many ways this combination may find in future to punish me. As an example of just how much that sort of thing is feared in this city suffice it to say that while I am receiving all manner of encouragement in private from men in all walks of life I have not found one who is willing to join me in the open, and they do not hesitate to say that it is because of fear of the damage this combination can and would do them.

I want to make it perfectly plain right here that my object is not to create opposition to the proposed site, first, because I believe it to be a proper one, and, second, because I would not be so presumptious if I did not. What I am protesting against is the possible private purchase of property from this "clique." I want the Government to acquire whatever property belonging to this unscrupulous combination that may be necessary to the Government's needs by condemnation, so that their usual manipulations may be prevented now that they are exposed.

For your information the option which Mr. Greve has induced the Government to take upon this property is of the same nature as the option which he induced the city, on behalf of the Neponsit Realty Co., of which he is vice president, to take upon the property at Rockaway Beach, now known as Seaside Park.

It is of the same nature as the option which William H. Reynolds induced the city of New York to take upon the Coney Island property known as Dreamland Park. This property was acquired by the city from the Dreamland Co., of which Mr. Reynolds is president.

The option the Federal Government has is of the same nature as the one the same William H. Reynolds, on behalf of the First Construction Co., of which he is president, induced the city of New York to take upon the Brooklyn property known as the Marginal Railway.

The intent of these options, so far as the property owners were concerned, was to embarrass the city in arriving at the true value of the properties under condemnation. As evidence of this I am sending you herewith copy of the city's brief on appeal from the award in the Dreamland case; also copy of the opinion of Mr. Justice Mills, of the appellate court, in reversing the award in the same case in so far as the Dreamland Co. was concerned. I also inclose map of the property under option at Rockaway Point.

You will readily see from these documents that the option the city accepted was made use of to the greatest possible extent to the detriment of the city. I think it will also be quite clear to you that the option in this case was made to serve the only purpose it could possibly have been intended for on the part of the owners.

The option in the Seaside Park matter, which preceded that of Dreamland, was made similar use of, but not quite so boldly, presumably because this seems to have been the first attempt at the "option game."

In the Marginal Railway case, though, which followed closely upon the heels of Dreamland, the option was handled with such a disregard for common decency that the city's counsel, who had long since become "case-hardened" to their methods, was shocked at their boldness. The award in this case has not yet been made, therefore I can not supply you with documentary evidence in connection with same, but will do so at the earliest possible moment; neither am I able to supply records in relation to the Seaside Park case, as no appeal was taken from the award therein made and affirmed in special term of the supreme court. The city's counsel regrets that this award was not appealed from, since the Dreamland award has been reversed.

In the Seaside Park case, as in that of Dreamland, there was difference of opinion in the corporation counsel's office as to the wisdom of taking an appeal from the award. In the first the negative prevailed, while in the second the positive "carried the day" and proved the greatest legal victory for the city that has been won for years, if not the most important that ever has been won.

The failure of the city to appeal from the award in the "Seaside Park" case, it is perfectly clear to all who know the methods employed by this combination, was responsible for the bold manner in which they conducted the "Dreamland" case, and the still more defiant attitude they assumed in the "Marginal Railway" case.

As an indication of the collusion between men and interests in connection with the three cases above referred to with the city of New York, as well as the one now under consideration affecting the Federal Government, I will explain as follows:

The "Seaside Park" property was sold to the Neponsit Realty Co., of which William M. Greve is vice president, by the West Rockaway Land Co., of which Mr. Frederick J. Lancaster is president. At the time this property was condemned by the city the West Rockaway Land Co. held large mortgages upon same, yet Mr. Lancaster, its president, was one of the expert appraisers for the Neponsit Co. Mr. Bryan L. Kennelly was another expert appraiser, despite the fact that he was at the time, and still is, associated with Mr. Lancaster in business. Mr. William H. Reynolds was another appraiser, yet he is president of Long Beach Estates, of which Mr. Greve was a stockholder, if not an officer.

The Long Beach Estates, of which Mr. Reynolds is president, is controlled by Frank Bailey, vice president of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co. Mr. Bailey is president of the Realty Associates, of which Mr. Greve is vice president. William H. Reynolds is president of "Dreamland," upon the property of which, at the time the city acquired it, the Title Guarantee & Trust Co. held large mortgages. As the record will show, Mr. Greve served "Dreamland" and Mr. Reynolds as an expert appraiser in this case, it will also show that he was a holder of second mortgage bonds of "Dreamland," which he testified, under oath, that he had sold, but could not tell when or to whom he had sold them. Bryan L. Kennelly and William P. Rae, both testified for "Dreamland," notwithstanding the fact that the option the city had accepted in this case has been based upon the private appraisals of these two experts.

In the matter of the "Marginal Railway," William H. Reynolds is the president of First Construction Co., the owner of this property. The option accepted by the city in this case was also based upon private appraisals made by Bryan L. Kennelly and William P. Rae, yet both of these experts have testified in this proceeding for First Construction Co. and Mr. Reynolds.

The Rockaway Point land, upon which the Federal Government has an option, which option was no doubt taken upon the strength, the usual private (?) appraisal, of some of these collusive experts, is owned by the Rockaway-Pacific Co., the stock of which is held by the Southern Pacific Co. The land is under lease to the Rockaway Park Association, of which William M. Greve is an officer, and apparently the manager.

This option scheme, of which this combination has made such free use, I think, is original with them, and as you will understand from what I have said, together with the documentary evidence supplied herewith, is exceedingly clever.

As a very striking example of how it works out in practice, I would direct your attention to the record in the "Brown" investigation of New York City's financial methods held during January of this year, wherein Comptroller William A. Prendergast, splendid man and official that he is, appears as defending his official acts in connection with the "Marginal Railway" case by falling back upon the acceptance by the city of the option in this case because it was based upon the joint appraisal of Bryan L. Kennelly and William P. Rae.

Thus it becomes quite clear that this option scheme constituted at once a lullaby for the conscientious official anxious to safeguard public funds and a bulwark to the unscrupulous one willing to disregard his obligations to the public. And who can say that this was not all thought out before the plan was first adopted?

What I have said is not based upon rumor in any sense, but upon first-hand knowledge and documentary evidence, and I am prepared to substantiate every statement I have made and in addition to that produce evidence I have and which I have not disclosed, relative to the scheme to mulct the Government in connection with this Rockaway Point matter.

Frankly, I am much disappointed with the lack of cordiality on the part of some of the officials with whom I have discussed this subject. It may be that I am old-fashioned in my ideas, but I can not help feeling disappointment that the knowledge of a scheme of this sort against the Government, especially at this time of great stress, should fail to fill any true American, whether he be official or private citizen, with indignation.

My reason for lodging this protest with you instead of the War Department is that I hope that in this way it can be made to serve the purpose of both departments.

Respectfully,

L. B. SHARP.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky is to pass from this paragraph, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I offer an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield first for a moment while I ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if this $1,400,000 contemplates the purchase of anything except land for coast defenses?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has nothing to do with arsenal lands, as I understand?

Mr. SHERLEY. It has not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, before I offer the amendment, I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. Is this $1,400,000 to be used for the projects the gentleman has mentioned and not to cover any others?

Mr. SHERLEY. It could be used, of course, for the procurement of any land in connection with works of fortification and coast defenses, but there is always an understanding between the War Department and the committee that moneys shall be expended for the purposes for which they have been asked; and, as I said in the beginning, it is contemplated that this money is to purchase certain lands in connection with the defenses in San Francisco, certain lands in connection with the defenses at San Pedro, and certain lands at Rockaway Beach in connection with the defenses of New York.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I correctly understood the gentleman. Now I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: Page 3, at the end of line 17, strike out "$1,400,000" and insert "$2,400,000."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to the condition that exists on the Pacific coast. I make no pretension of knowing anything about these affairs. I am not a military expert. I hope I may have the attention of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], because I know he will be interested in this matter. On the west coast of the State of Washington are the two harbors, Grays Harbor and Willapa Harbor, two of the best harbors upon the Pacific coast. They are both entirely unfortified.

As I said a moment ago, I am not an expert, and I do not know what the strategic advantages of those two harbors might be; but last year I had occasion to talk with one of the great military experts of this country and one of our leading soldiers, whose name I will not mention, because he was talking with me as a man and not as an officer. But I will be pleased to give his name to the gentleman from Kentucky if he wishes it. That military expert told me in that conversation that, having recently visited all the fortifications throughout the country, Grays Harbor and Willapa Harbor were the most vulnerable points in the United States. He further made the statement, "Mr. HUMPHREY, if I were leading an attack against the Pacific coast, I would go through those harbors." He further made the statement that the Pacific Northwest was the most vulnerable portion of our country, and that the most urgent need for fortifications was at those harbors.

Now, in view of that situation I can not understand why it is that some recommendation has not been made by the War Department to take care of these two harbors and to take some steps toward their fortification.

The gentleman from Kentucky has been talking about the difficulty of securing lands, and I recognize that there is great force in what he says. It so happens that I have had a great deal of experience in my time in condemnation proceedings, and I know that often there is an attempt made to make the Government pay a high price for property when it is found that the Government needs it. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to this fact, that so far as these two harbors are concerned, the Government could now secure the necessary lands for a nominal price. I am not sure but that in one instance, in the case of Grays Harbor, the land needed would be donated. My colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, who lives in that vicinity, can make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If my colleague will yield at that point. The citizens on Grays Harbor realize the necessity of the fortifications there. In the last 20 days they have, largely on the part of Mr. E. C. Finch, placed an offer before the War Department to give the Government several hundred acres to be used for fortification purposes. They want the offer accepted, and they would like a recommendation to the effect that the fortifications be built there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am undertaking to call attention to the fact that, according to the highest military authority, here are two great harbors on the Pacific Ocean totally unfortified, and no steps being taken toward their fortification; that coming through these harbors an enemy can reach the three great transcontinental railroads, seize the cities of Seattle, Tacoma, and Portland, and all that great western country; and I think that in view of this talk that we hear about preparedness, in view of the millions that we are spending, it is time for the Government to take some steps to protect that portion of the country as well as other portions of the country.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes. I will ask for five minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asks to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Did I understand that the two places referred to were Willapa Bay and Grays Harbor?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; Willapa Harbor and Grays Harbor.

Mr. SHERLEY. I just wanted to identify them. I will be glad to make a statement when the gentleman finishes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, at Grays Harbor the Government has just completed the expenditure of nearly $3,000,000 in building jetties and improving the harbor. I will ask my colleague from Washington what is the total amount that the Government has expended in jetties at Grays Harbor?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Two and three-quarter million dollars in actual jetty construction; about $3,000,000, including maintenance and inner harbor work.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; $3,000,000 has been expended for the purpose of protecting that harbor. We now have 25 feet at mean low water, and an enemy can come into the harbor without meeting any opposition whatever. The same condition exists at Willapa Harbor, although the channel there may not be quite so deep.

Now, as I said awhile ago, I do not know anything about it, but I do know what the military authorities think of it. I do know that, according to their statement, there is more need of fortifications there than in any other portion of the United States, and I know that if they take some steps now they can acquire that land for practically a nominal figure, but if they wait they will meet the same conditions that they are meeting now at other places and will have to pay a high price for the land. I do not think we can begin too soon to fortify our coasts, and I believe that whatever difference of opinion there may be among the people of the United States with reference to a great Army, there is no difference of opinion on the proposition that we ought to have a strong Navy and that we ought to fortify our coasts.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is there any town on either of those harbors that needs protecting? If so, what is the size of it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. On Grays Harbor there are two towns, one of about 15,000 inhabitants and the other of about 10,000. There are probably 15,000 people on the other harbor. There are two cities on each of those harbors and rich countries behind them. But it is not alone to protect these immediate cities, although that is one object, but the one great object is to keep the enemy from seizing the great transcontinental railway lines.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. These two harbors furnish a point of invasion for the whole Columbia River Basin and are open points for that just as much as the mouth of the Columbia River itself.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They are not only an open point to the Columbia River Basin, they furnish an avenue of approach to the cities of Portland, Seattle, and Tacoma, and take in the whole Puget Sound country clear up to British Columbia. I can only repeat what I have been told by one of the highest military authorities in the United States that this the most vulnerable portion of all our coast, either upon the Atlantic or the Pacific Oceans, and I can not understand why it has been overlooked.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to ask the gentleman whether there is not grave danger also of a submarine attack on that post-office site that was sold to the Government in Seattle a few years ago?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know whether the gentleman intends to be facetious or whether he speaks from ignorance. I do not know which to characterize it, but I want to say for his information that there have been more lies published about that proposition than about any other honest transaction that has ever come to my notice.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand it is mostly under water.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; it is not under water——

Mr. BORLAND. And so I was wondering whether it was in danger of submarine attack.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is not under water, and any man who makes that statement is either ignorant or worse.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Can there be anything worse?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is mistaken in his statement that this matter has been overlooked. It has not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not mean to say it had been inadvertently overlooked.

Mr. SHERLEY. The trouble as to the gentleman himself and his one informant, whom he speaks of as the highest military authority, is that their view is not shared by the board of review that examined the whole question of the seacoast defense of America. I have in my hand a statement showing not only every place that is fortified and every place that it is proposed to fortify, but also every harbor, including the two that the gentleman mentions, where anybody has ever suggested that there ought to be fortifications. I read the following statement as to Willapa Bay:

First, this bay lies 22 miles north of the mouth of the Columbia River. Navigable for deep-draft ships. Commercial importance, small; of some strategic value as a base for a foreign invasion of the Northwest. Existing armament, none. New armament recommended by board of review, none. Neither strategic nor commercial importance is deemed sufficient to justify incurring the cost of the provision of fixed fortifications. The occupation of the bay by an enemy as a base for an invasion can be denied by large caliber movable seacoast armament. The best and only adequate defense is by a mobile force.

I now read a statement touching Grays Harbor:

This bay lies 40 miles north of the mouth of the Columbia River. The controlling depth of the entrance, 19 feet, is too shoal for deep-draft ships. Commercial importance, small. Existing armament, none. New armament recommended by Board of Review, none. Neither the commercial nor the strategic importance of this bay is deemed sufficient to warrant incurring the cost of the provision of fixed fortifications. The occupation of the bay as a base by an enemy can be denied by large-caliber movable seacoast armament. The best and only adequate defense is by a mobile force.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield? Grays Harbor has a much greater depth of water than that.

Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment. Mr. Chairman, I desire to repeat what I said yesterday, that it is absolutely out of the question to undertake to fortify all of the coast of America. Even a printing press could not print money enough to carry out such a scheme as that. I have repeatedly stated, not only yesterday, but when this bill was up before, in the hope that simply by reiteration if no other way I might get it into the minds of men that the purpose of fortification is not to prevent a landing anywhere upon our coast, but only to prevent a landing at certain places that possess strategic importance sufficient to warrant the fortification, or where there are great centers of population which would otherwise be subject to inadmissible damage. Now, the gentleman from the West has called up two very good illustrations. Here are two harbors that have no great importance. Their commercial importance from the standpoint of the great Nation at large is completely negligible.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But will the gentleman permit a statement there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Both these harbors are literally back doors to the cities of Portland, Tacoma, and Seattle, and all of that heavily populated country.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably; and again I say to you that the fortifications of America are not intended to prevent all invasion. The problem that the gentleman suggests is a problem for the mobile army.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The mobile guns spoken of in the report are supposed to be a part of the Army organization and plans for defense.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then that statement will be of some satisfaction to the people of the Northwest. I would like to ask the gentleman what the date is of the report that he has read from.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a report made by the board of review and was rendered November 26, 1915. The officers that composed that board are the following: Maj. Gen. Hugh L. Scott, Chief of Staff; Brig. Gen. M. M. Macomb, Chief of War College Division; Maj. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, Chief Mobile Army; Brig. Gen. E. M. Weaver, Chief Coast Artillery Division; Brig. Gen. Dan. C. Kingman, Chief of Engineers; Brig. Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance.

Now, I submit that the statement of the gentleman's colleague that the highest military authorities believe in the fortification of these particular harbors is stretching it a little in the face of the statement of a board composed of as eminent gentlemen as they are.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And yet not one of these gentlemen will say that these places do not need defense.

Mr. SHERLEY. Every one of these men have stated, in the most formal way that they can state, that there ought not to be any fixed fortifications there, and that is what the proposal of the gentleman from Washington means. Shall we spend a million dollars for buying land for fortifications that we do not expect to build?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When was the data collected with reference to Grays Harbor and Willapa Harbor?

Mr. SHERLEY. The report was made November 26, 1915. I knew that gentlemen under the sudden impetus of the popularity of the preparedness propaganda would be making suggestions to fortify every part of the coast that happened to be in their respective districts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On the contrary——

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not saying that in an offensive way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Instead of working under the impetus, I suggest that the citizens of these harbors are among the original preparedness advocates, their showing for the need of defense there having been made many years ago.

Mr. SHERLEY. In anticipation of that situation I asked that there be prepared for me by the War Department a statement as to why recommendations were not made at particular places as well as the reasons they had given for fortifying particular places, and it seems that my judgment as to what might be required on the floor was rather good. I submit to the committee that for us to increase, by a million dollars, this appropriation would be foolish. The gentleman has no knowledge as to the amount of land that needs to be acquired, even assuming that fortifications were to be placed there, nor the value of the land, and for this committee to run off wild and appropriate a million dollars for the purpose would be to do a very foolish thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The statement of the distinguished chairman of the committee will be read with the greatest interest by the people of the north Pacific, and I hope that all the statements that he has read, and his further statement that Grays Harbor needs no fixed fortifications will not act as an obstacle to the United States Government accepting the gift from the people of some 200 acres at this place. These people feel that——

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; the people up in New England during the Spanish War felt that they needed fortifications, and they were shipped up some guns that did not amount to a row of pins, and after that they slept perfectly comfortable. The same thing happened on the Gulf coast. But we can not fortify the coast on the ignorance or fears of people. Now, I say that in all kindness. The matter of fortification is one involving deep study, and the great advantage that we possess is that heretofore Congress has always declined to listen to the pressure of localities touching fortifications, but has followed the recommendation of those who ought to know, and there has been no attempt in this or any other bill to discriminate against any section either on the Atlantic or the Pacific, north or south.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Does he not think it is unfair, or does he think it is fair for the War College board or Army maneuver organizations to persistently issue statements that the North Pacific and the harbors are the most vulnerable places in the United States?

Mr. SHERLEY. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then we ought not to blame the people.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not blame the people.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the report that he has just read from is a confidential report.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; it is confidential, and I will submit to the House why it is confidential, because I do not want to give the impression that I have something up my sleeve. The report gives in detail the existing armament and the new armament that is to be placed there.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am aware of the propriety of that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know the gentleman is interested in the defense in connection with New Orleans. There is a recommendation looking to the placing of some secondary batteries in connection with the defense of the Mississippi River.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I assume that the gentleman from Kentucky favors the report in that respect.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall, if I continue to have charge of the fortifications bill, carry out the recommendations of the Board of Review touching additional armament.

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHALEY. Is there any provision made in the report for the defense on the south Atlantic?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are a great many places upon the south Atlantic where they contemplate that additions will be made, some not of great moment and some of considerable moment.

At the Charleston Harbor, in which the gentleman doubtless is interested, it is proposed to make a change by adding some long-range rifles and some long-range mortars, as well as changing the mounts of some of the existing armament.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the population of Charleston?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not recollect.

Mr. WHALEY. It is 70,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. But there is reason for the defense of Charleston that lies outside of the size of the city, and that is the fact that you have there a navy yard which needs protection, and it unquestionably will continue to be an important plant and one that ought not to be left undefended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, I would not question its claim for the world.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but I understand also what the gentleman is inferentially undertaking to do, and that is to draw a comparison between Charleston and the Northwest. I desire to say that there are very elaborate fortifications on Puget Sound, and it is proposed to very greatly strengthen them. They are the ones that ought to be strengthened, and not new ones placed near Puget Sound. At least, that is the judgment of the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. A few moments ago I spoke somewhat facetiously to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] about the post-office site in the city of Seattle. I do not want the gentleman to think that I spoke purely upon idle rumor, or without any substantial statement to back up what I said. I implied in my question that the post-office site at Seattle was unavailable to the Government, because it was under water, and I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the following testimony before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, I read that a long time ago.

Mr. BORLAND. Then, I desire to call the attention of the House to it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to know whether the gentleman stands responsible for that?

Mr. BORLAND. I read from the testimony taken before the Committee on Appropriations in consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill:

The CHAIRMAN. The next is Seattle, Wash. The estimate of $50,000, submitted in the sundry civil bill, has been withdrawn. Why is that?

Mr. WETMORE. That is largely because of the undesirability of the site.

The CHAIRMAN. We would like to have something more than that. The site is purchased, the building authorized, and plans prepared, and now you propose not to go ahead with the building. What is undesirable about the site?

Mr. NEWTON. I think I can explain that. When we were about to commence the plans and take up that project in its regular order it was reported by the Post Office Department that the site was in an improper place and that it was not feasible to put up a building on it. I went to Seattle and looked it over, and I was convinced that the report of the Post Office Department was correct. Later the Secretary of the Treasury was there, he saw it, and his opinion was the same as ours. The conditions are practically these: That site was purchased for $169,500 out of an appropriation of $200,000 for a site. It is located in a very low spot, what is known as the tide flats. When I saw it, it was submerged; I was there about five or six weeks later and it was more submerged. The first time I think the depth of water was not more than 3 or 4 feet, while the second time it was about 7 or 8 feet. The streets near by are on an elevation of about 25 or 30 feet higher than the lot.

The CHAIRMAN. Where are these tidewater flats?

Mr. NEWTON. They are in the general vicinity of the Great Northern and Milwaukee Railroad station. I am not familiar with the names of the streets.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know the names of the streets myself, but I know where the Great Northern station is.

Mr. NEWTON. This site is in that vicinity.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a big filled-in tract over the one side.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is where it is located?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes, sir; and it is so far away that even if the physical conditions were all right it would be in an unsuitable place. It is so far away from the railroad station that the Post Office Department reported that it would cost $19,000 annually to transport the mails from the railroad station to the office and back again.

Mr. WETMORE. In addition to that, Mr. Newton, there is a bill pending before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to increase the limit of cost for this building. I do not know what the amount is, but I think it increases the limit from $300,000 to $1,250,000; so that we could not prepare plans at this time for this anyway.

Mr. GILLETT. Is that section built up at all? Is it expected that the present condition will exist permanently, or will all of the ground be raised?

Mr. NEWTON. Such buildings as are there are on stilts. There are streets running through there, but they are all banked up like a railroad embankment.

So when I asked the gentleman whether he fears any submarine attack on the proposed post-office site at Seattle I was not asking him on the mere rumor of newspapers, but upon testimony given by three distinguished officers of the Federal Government who had examined it for that purpose. If the site is not suitable, the Government will have to abandon it. We have paid out for it $169,500, and if we can not use it we are going to abandon it; but I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to that fact in his urging upon the House the acquirement of further property in his particular section of the country.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell the House when the site was purchased?

Mr. BORLAND. My recollection is that the authorization was in the public-building bill of 1912. It was prior to the present administration. It had reached the point where an estimate was made for the beginning of the construction of a building, and that estimate was withdrawn. It so struck the attention of the committee that anybody would withdraw an estimate for constructing a building that we asked why it was that the estimate had been withdrawn, and received the answer that the site was under water.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the motive of my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] was in referring to that post-office site—whether it was done thinking that he might reflect upon me, or whether he did it facetiously or ignorantly. I do not know what the purpose was, but I will waive that part of it. I knew of the statement which he read, for I have seen it. First, let me say that, whatever there may be about the Seattle site, it was selected by a Government agent and approved by a Government agent, and, so far as I am personally concerned, I have never recommended the site. Neither directly or indirectly have I ever said that it was a suitable site. I never had anything to do with the matter until months after it was selected. I make the statement because some one in the Treasury Department inserted a note in the record in that case that I had recommended the purchase of that site. There is a gentleman sitting here on the floor of the House, upon the Democratic side of the aisle, who has examined that record, and he knows that any intimation or statement of that kind is absolutely untrue. Whoever made it ignorantly or purposely lied.

I can not believe that this was inserted in the record with the deliberate attempt to deceive the public in relation to my actions in the matter, but this has been the result. I feel satisfied that this memoranda misled the World's Work in an article that it published about the transaction. I do not claim that it misled certain disreputable representatives of disreputable publications that used it, but they took advantage of it to attack me and misrepresent my action in the matter. There never was a more villainous illustration of certain moral degenerates "lying with a circumstance" than has been furnished by this post-office site transaction in relation to myself.

I have been a Member of this House for 14 years, and during that time I have been subjected to a great deal of villification and slander, misrepresented in every possible way that hate and malice could invent, by certain yellow sheets published in my State, but I have never yet replied to any of these attacks. This matter in relation to the post-office site has been one of their choicest falsehoods. I should not have dignified them by replying, but since the gentleman from Missouri has seen fit to bring this matter in on the floor of the House I think perhaps it is best for me to give the facts as shown by the record in the case.

That record shows that the purchase of the present site for a subpost-office station at Seattle was recommended by the Treasury Department on October 6, 1910. On January 19, 1911, Senator POINDEXTER wrote the department asking as to the status of the matter. On July 13, 1911, Senator Piles sent a telegram saying that it was a suitable site, and on the following day the chamber of commerce recommended it as a suitable site. On August 12, 1911, I wrote my first letter in relation to the matter asking that the deal be closed. This was 10 months and 6 days after it had been recommended for purchase. No objection was raised to the site on the ground of not being suitable until April 29, 1915.

But whatever may be said as to the fitness or the unfitness of this site for post-office purposes, the record demonstrates absolutely that I never at any time or in any manner by word or act suggested that it was suitable for the purposes for which it was intended. I never talked with any owner or anyone interested, directly or indirectly, in the site until long after the deal was closed. In fact, I had nothing whatever to do with the matter until, as is shown by the record, more than 10 months afterwards when I wrote and asked that the deal be closed in order that an appropriation could be secured to construct the building. I have made it a rule always never to take any part in any way whatever in these controversies about the purchase of a site. Never in all the time I have been in office have I ever recommended a site for purchase or permitted a real estate agent or anyone interested in the matter to talk to me about it. But if I had recommended this site as a suitable one I certainly would have been in very respectable company, for Senator Piles and the Seattle Chamber of Commerce recommended it. If I was guilty of anything wrong in writing on August 12, 1911, asking as to the status of the matter and that the deal be closed, I was in good society, for Senator POINDEXTER had written several months before, also asking as to the status of the matter. So if there is anything wrong about the transaction I am at least in good society.

But I want to repeat once for all, as emphatically as words can make it, that the record shows absolutely that I never had anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the selection of this site and that I never recommended it as a suitable site for the Government to buy.

Now, so much as to my part in the transaction. But since it has been brought up I think perhaps it might be well to insert in the RECORD a letter written by the Postmaster General under date of August 19, 1915, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the reply of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury thereto. These communications are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 19, 1915.

Hon. WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: Referring to this department's letter of the 3d ultimo, recommending the sale of the site already acquired for a Federal building at Seattle, Wash., and the purchase of a new location in the vicinity of the block bounded by Jackson and King Streets and Fifth and Sixth Avenues, I wish to inform you that the First Assistant Postmaster General, who visited Seattle during July last, states that the quarters recently leased by this department adjacent to the Great Northern Railway Co.'s depot will provide necessary postal accommodations for many years to come and that the proposed new Government-owned building will not be required for post-office purposes in the near future.

It is recommended, therefore, that steps be taken to dispose of the present location and that no action be taken looking to the acquisition of another site until such time as it is evident that the accommodations now provided for the Postal Service are becoming inadequate.

Respectfully,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

NEW POST OFFICE, SEATTLE, WASH.

AUGUST 25, 1915.

The honorable the POSTMASTER GENERAL.

SIR: By direction of the Secretary, receipt is acknowledged of your communication of the 19th instant, relative to your previous recommendation of the sale of the site already acquired for the Federal building at Seattle, Wash., and a purchase of a new location elsewhere.

Your recommendation is noted that no action be taken looking to the acquisition of another site until such time as it is evident that the accommodations now provided for the Postal Service are becoming inadequate. The department thanks you for your suggestion and careful consideration will be given thereto.

Assistant Secretary Newton has taken with him to Seattle a copy of your letter of the 19th instant, above referred to, and will look over the situation thoroughly at Seattle this week.

Respectfully,

A. J. PETERS,
Assistant Secretary.

I do not think anyone can read these two communications without feeling that perhaps there was some motive in Mr. Newton's finding that this site was unsuitable. At the very time that he was out there making the investigation he had in his pocket a letter from the Postmaster General recommending that the present location be abandoned, and that no further action be taken toward the construction of a building until the accommodations which they had secured from the Great Northern Railway should prove to be inefficient.

In regard to whether or not the site is a suitable one personally I do not know. I know that it was recommended by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Seattle. I know that there are hundreds of people in the city of Seattle who will make affidavit that every material statement that Mr. Newton made before the Appropriations Committee in regard to this site is absolutely untrue.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. This report says that it was examined first by the Post Office Department, second by Mr. Newton, and third by the Secretary of the Treasury. Does the gentleman include all of these in his sweeping denunciation?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I include all that Mr. Newton said in regard to the site being under tidewater. I do not know personally, but I am telling you what the people of Seattle will say and what they have said.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman denies that it was under tidewater.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. On information, yes. I am telling you what the people of Seattle say. All my information is that this site is not now and has not been since before the Government purchased it covered by tidewater. But as to the suitability of the site, whether it is under water or not, is not the question at issue. I will leave that to those who were responsible for its selection to answer.

Mr. BORLAND. I understood the gentleman was denying the statement attributed to Mr. Newton that he, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], was instrumental in obtaining the site.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I deny that statement absolutely. I know it is not true, and I do not believe the statement he makes in regard to the site being under tidewater to be true.

Mr. BORLAND. And the further statement that the site is unsuitable, which is based on the record of both departments, the gentleman is not prepared to deny?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know personally about the suitability of the site. I did not recommend it, but the agent of the Treasury Department did. So did the chamber of commerce and Senator Piles. I think they probably know as much about it as Mr. Newton, who went there with a letter in his pocket that virtually directed him to condemn it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BARKLEY). The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want five minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am perfectly willing to afford generous debate on the bill, but I do not think the gentleman ought to ask additional time for a discussion so foreign as this is.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I agree with the gentleman; but the gentleman from Missouri has seen fit to bring up this matter, and I think I am entitled to five minutes more, inasmuch as the matter was raised in this way.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Missouri had five minutes and the gentleman from Washington has had five minutes to reply. I have no objection to the gentleman having a minute or so longer, but I submit——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Kentucky. He got an extension this morning, although he occupied 35 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will repeat that I have no desire to cut off debate on the bill at all, but this is a foreign matter. I shall not object now, but I trust gentlemen will confine their remarks to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Washington proceeding for five minutes?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection, but I want to say to the gentleman from Washington that I made no personal comment about the gentleman from Washington. I did make a very pointed comment about the site, and the gentleman took it up in a rather sharp and quick manner and somewhat challenged my authority. I produced the authority.

If I had no authority, the statement would be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I stated awhile ago in regard to this, Mr. Newton, when he made that investigation out there, evidently did not understand the situation or he would not understand the situation when he attempted to criticize this site for a substation, because it was on what he called filled land. He says it is some distance from the railroad stations. The records show that one reason why it was selected was because it was near the railroad station. Much of the city of Seattle is built upon this same kind of land—tide lands that have been reclaimed. The railroad station, only a few blocks away, is built upon precisely the same kind of land.

When I went to Seattle the tide went four or five blocks up into what is now the city, beyond where the railroad station stands to-day. His criticism that it is below the level of the street to one who knows the fact is idiotic, because if you filled it up and you constructed your building you would have to excavate for a basement. This site, as the record shows, is exactly on the same level as the railroad stations. Many of the greatest buildings in Seattle are standing upon land of this same character; a great part of the city is built upon reclaimed tidelands. Mr. Newton is the first man that ever supposed that such land was unsuitable for building purposes. So far as the price is concerned, I do not know anything about that. I am not a real estate man, nor do I permit real estate men to give me their views as to the price or suitability of any property they are trying to sell to the Government. That site was recommended for purchase by the Government agent of the Treasury Department——

Mr. BORLAND. Under the preceding administration, of course.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes. Some two or three months after that Senator POINDEXTER wrote a letter to the department about it. Six or seven months after Senator POINDEXTER wrote his letter I wrote one asking about the matter and wanting them to get it in shape so that an appropriation could be made for the construction of the building. That is all there is of the whole story.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Has the gentleman from Kentucky—and if he has, is it proper to give it—information as to where this $1,400,000 is to be expended?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can tell the gentleman in a general way. There is to be for San Francisco property on Lake Merced, which is just outside the edge of San Francisco, something like $250,000. At San Pedro there is to be an expenditure of about $50,000, and at the eastern end of Long Island Sound there is to be something like $8,000 or $10,000, and something less than $1,000,000 at Rockaway Beach.

Mr. MANN. Does this include anything for Cape Henry?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not. We have purchased that land.

Mr. MANN. I did not know, but I understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND] made some remarks in reference to the item.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have purchased all of the land at Cape Henry except a little strip that will be necessary for the right of way for a railroad from the wharf to the fortification. An agreement has been entered into with the land company there—at least, an offer has been made by them—that will probably cause the expenditure of something like $50,000. But there are always some little balances under this fund by which they take care of matters of this sort.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What amount for the mouth of the Columbia River?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is nothing at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For the acquisition of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal and to purchase the same, in accordance with the recommendations contained in Senate Document No. 215, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, and House Document No. 391, Sixty-second Congress, second session; and in event of the failure of such negotiations within a period of six months from the date of the passage of this act, to proceed to acquire the said canal by condemnation.

"SEC. 2. That the sum of $2,514,290, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the acquisition by purchase or condemnation of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, as provided in section 1: Provided, That in said purchase or condemnation the existing interest of the United States in said canal shall be allowed for upon the basis of the total sum fixed for its acquisition either by purchase or condemnation."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman reserve his point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am willing to reserve it for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it may be that this amendment is subject to a point of order, but there can be no question from a military or naval standpoint as to the importance of adopting an amendment of this kind. We are making large appropriations for preparedness both in the matter of the Army and the Navy and in the matter of coast defenses. But no provision has been made for this inland passage along the Atlantic seaboard, which from a strategic point of view is regarded by military and naval experts as one of the very keys to the defensive situation.

It is not idle to say that the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, which links up the two great bays of the Atlantic coast, is as important to the United States as is the Kiel Canal to Germany and in the event of war would very soon be found to be of supreme importance to this country. Numerous efforts have been instituted by the Government of the United States looking to the taking over of this property, not that it is private property alone, or that it is one of a series of waterways that might be built connecting up the two great bays, uniting the north and south coasts by an inland waterway, but that it is the one vital link essential to the defense of the country.

The history of all our wars shows the importance of having means to get in and means to get out of a tight place when attacked by an enemy. Here are two great approaches to the ocean, the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay, which is more or less fortified, and the mouth of the Delaware Bay, which is not fortified at all. And yet there would be times under stress when the connection between these two great bays, or between the North and the South, would tend to relieve the Navy of the United States, and possibly save the Army in a crisis.

I want to quote briefly from some of the reports of the Navy and military experts who have investigated this subject from time to time. They begin back in 1872, when the Government thought it advisable to make an inquiry as to the opening of this particular channel. But first I shall quote from a board which was created in 1882, at the head of which was Lieut. Col. William P. Craighill, United States Army. In the report submitted by Col. Craighill appears this very significant statement, more significant now than it was when it was written and presented to Congress in 1882:

QUOTATIONS FROM REPORTS.

The main objects of such a canal are supposed to be two: The greater facilitation of the defense of a part of the territory of the United States by the opening of an interior short line of communication between the great bays—Chesapeake and Delaware—and the shortening of a great route of foreign and coastwise commerce. Both of these objects seem to be of national importance.

As we stand to-day, with the limited depth of the existing canal, there are not adequate facilities for communication between the forts and navy yards along the coast, and there would not be in the event of war or blockade outside of the Chesapeake or outside of the Delaware. Vessels of the United States blockaded inside of either one of these bays would be utterly helpless so far as obtaining repairs or relief from any of the great naval stations is concerned. This report of Col. Craighill back in 1882 is such a strong argument in favor of taking over this canal that attention ought to be called to it now when provision is being made for our coast defenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the provision is clearly subject to a point of order. I do not want to be discourteous to the gentleman; I am perfectly willing that he may extend his remarks ad libitum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman to let me proceed for five minutes. Others have been granted an additional five minutes, and I have not spoken on the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is not now proceeding on the bill. He is talking about a matter of rivers and harbors. I make a point of order on the proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

For operation and maintenance of fire-control installations at seacoast defenses, $130,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the report of Col. Craighill——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the amendment offered. I stated to the gentleman in all candor that I want to be fair to him and every other Member of the House, but it is not fair to take up the time upon a matter that the gentleman knows is not in order and which the Chair has declared is not in order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has already been sustained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; the point of order that has just been made. I desire to speak on the subject of the coast defenses, and I moved to strike out the last word in order that I might be heard on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order on the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have quoted from the report of a commission headed by Col. Craighill, of the United States Army, in respect to the importance to the seacoast defenses of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, and I desire to continue along that line by quoting from another report presented to Congress in 1894 by a board consisting of Gen. Thomas L. Casey, Col. Craighill, Capt. George Dewey, now the Admiral of the United States Navy, and two citizen members of the commission, in which, in referring to the importance of this canal and the coast defenses of the country which we are now discussing, they said:

So far as commerce is concerned, a canal connecting the two bays will inure more especially to coastwise traffic. Such a canal must eventually form but a link in a chain of interior navigation. To this navigation the most northerly of the routes is best adapted, affording as it does the minimum of restricted canal way and the minimum of total length.

That northerly route is the canal to which I am now calling attention.

I have had some correspondence with Admiral Dewey on this subject, and find him in hearty and thorough accord with the demand of the people along the Atlantic coast for the taking over of this canal by the Government, not only for commercial purposes but for the protection of the coast line, which is a part of the purpose we are now discussing in this bill. Not only do Admiral Dewey and these other distinguished men whom I have quoted approve of this project but they insist upon it as a part of our coast-defense scheme.

But, Mr. Chairman, there was still another commission, appointed in 1907, which I shall quote. This commission, headed by military and naval officers and embracing in its membership private citizens appointed by the President of the United States, the chief of whom was Gen. Felix Agnus, of Baltimore, brought in a report in which they said:

In a general strategic sense the military advantages of the proposed ship canal appear most prominently in the channel offered for the rapid transit of naval vessels from one bay to the other to concentrate against hostile naval fleets or for the breaking of blockades.

Now, listen, Members of Congress, providing for the defenses of the country, creating new positions in the Army and Navy, making appropriations for armament—listen to the one link in your preparedness chain which apparently you have overlooked. This is what the Agnus Board in 1907 said:

To make the canal thus available at all times, its termini must be thoroughly protected by sufficient coast defenses to render its passage at all times open. This is at present secured on the Delaware for the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal route by existing defense, and on Chesapeake by the defense of Washington, Baltimore, and Hampton Roads, which an attacking naval force would hesitate to leave in its rear, sheltering cruisers that could demolish its boats of communication and supply. But full strategic use of the canal would be secured only by adequate coast defense at each terminus. It is not considered that a project for the defense of the Chesapeake terminus lies within the scope of this report, as such project should receive careful consideration by competent board of military engineers. The cost would be practically the same for either route.

I do not quote it all, but the report continues:

The Civil War developed the enormous value of the present canal as a means of transportation of troops, supplies, and prisoners. While our railroad facilities have greatly increased since that time, it is easily conceivable that in future wars or internal disturbances the proposed ship canal would very likely prove an important adjunct to rail transportation and possibly a vital factor in campaigns, should rail transportation be interrupted by accidents, strikes, or hostile raids.

The commission was referring to that serious moment in the life of the Nation when troops were sorely needed in Washington, when railroad bridges north of the Capital had been destroyed and troops were carried through the old canal on barges. That was when the railroads were incompetent and in the hands of the enemy. It was this canal that transported the northern troops to save the Capital at the call of Lincoln. They have not reported that canal in this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I object.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOUSTON). The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say just a word with reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] in regard to the reports he read as to Grays Harbor. I hope the other portion of those reports was more correct than the one giving the depth of the water. I have just had a telephone from the engineer's office, and the depth of water at Grays Harbor at mean low tide is 22 feet. It is usually 24 feet, but at this particular time it is 22 feet, as I am informed. So evidently, when that board made its report, instead of reporting the depth of water at Grays Harbor, they were reporting on the depth of water in the inner harbor, which is many miles upstream, at the city of Aberdeen.

Either I did not state what I desired to say or the gentleman from Kentucky misunderstood me to some extent. I said one of highest authority. I will tell the gentleman personally who it was who made this statement to me in regard to the situation.

I recognize what the gentleman from Kentucky says with regard to the impossibility of fortifying the entire coast. I listened to his speech yesterday with a great deal of interest, and I agree mainly with what he says. I know we can not protect all our coasts by fortifying them, but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that outside of the mouth of the Columbia River, after you leave San Francisco there are practically no harbors on the Pacific coast until you get to Willapa Harbor and Grays Harbor. We are not asking that you protect the entire line of coast, but we are asking that those two harbors that we do have be reasonably fortified.

The gentleman from Kentucky speaks about the "ignorance of fear." I do not think we are more influenced by the "ignorance of fear" on the Pacific coast than on the Atlantic coast. I have been down around Charleston, S. C., several times, and I think that region should be fortified. But I do not see any more reason why Charleston should be fortified to protect our people through the "ignorance of fear" than that these harbors on the Pacific coast should be fortified. We have comparatively few harbors on the Pacific Ocean, and those that we do have should be fortified.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMAMENT OF FORTIFICATIONS.

For purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $2,821,500: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $3,500,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk two amendments to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 4, line 1, after the words "manufacture at the arsenals," strike out "$2,821,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments to the sums in this paragraph and two more to the succeeding paragraph. Under these amendments I would be entitled to 20 minutes. I should very much prefer to be allowed to proceed for not over 15 minutes on the subject of the need of artillery and ammunition for the mobile army, and to waive my right to debate the other amendments.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey may proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I likewise ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 4, line 5, after the word "exceed," strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$10,000,000."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have two amendments to the other section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to have them read now?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey:
Page 4, line 10, after the word "arsenals," strike out "$2,700,000" and insert "$5,000,000."
Page 4, line 14, after the word "exceed" in line 13, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$5,000,000."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my thanks and the thanks of this Committee of the Whole and the thanks of the country to the Committee on Appropriations and to the gentleman in charge of this bill for the recognition that they have given to the needs of the mobile army in the matter of appropriations for artillery and for ammunition.

It is right to point out that last year the appropriation for Field Artillery was $450,000, while this year it is $2,821,500 in this bill, which is nearly $400,000 more than was asked in the estimate.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the totals are very much larger than that. Last year there was carried an appropriation of $450,000 cash and contract authorizations for $300,000——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am going to speak about that. Last year there was a contract authorization in addition for only $300,000. This year there is a contract authorization for $3,500,000. Last year for ammunition there was an appropriation of $1,160,000, and this year there is an appropriation of $2,700,000, in addition to a contract authorization of $1,500,000.

I recognize that the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. SHERLEY] and the committee are beginning to see the needs of the country, the needs of the mobile army and of the Volunteers, who will be our Army in case of war.

These appropriations for cannon and for ammunition amount to about $10,000,000. Last year they amounted to something less than $2,000,000. I lately made an estimate of the cost per man for all equipment to enable him to go into a war. It comes to about $238 per man, of which about $150 to $170 is for artillery and its ammunition. At that rate the appropriations that are given this year would provide for about 60,000 men. In 10 years they would provide for about 600,000 men. The experience of the present European war shows that we shall not have to provide for any small army, because standing armies in Europe are all gone. We shall have to provide material to put the Nation in arms, and our Nation consists of 20,000,000 able-bodied men. In the Civil War we put something like 3,000,000 men into the service on both sides. In any future war, should there be one, we would have to put into the field not 3,000,000 men but 10,000,000 men, and we should have to do it right away instead of doing it in the course of four years. An annual appropriation for 60,000 men is utterly inadequate for that purpose. We do not want a large standing army or militarism, but we do want the material by which our Nation can be put in arms. As somebody quoted to me the other day—

Johnny get your gun! If you have no gun, you can't shoot.

Let the Nation have guns and ammunition, as the Boers in South Africa had theirs, and the Nation is so far prepared for war. Let the Nation not have those guns and ammunition, and it is not prepared for war.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. For a question only.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman does not care to be interrupted, I will not interrupt him.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would rather finish this statement first.

My estimate of the cost of artillery per man was only for field artillery—3-inch guns and their ammunition—allowing about three guns to 1,000 men. It was supposed that as the guns are now able to deliver more shots per minute, we could get along with fewer guns than would be required under the original estimate of five guns per 1,000 men, which prevailed in old times. The experience of the present war is that artillery has to be provided to an amount almost unexampled in the past; that field guns, rapid-fire guns, small howitzers, trench guns for throwing bombs, and all sorts of devices are used to a much larger number than ever before, and that the expenditure of ammunition is so far beyond the estimates that were made by the Ordnance Department of the United States, and on which this estimate of $150 a man for artillery supplies was made, that you could readily on field guns alone go up to $250 a man.

Again, the experience of the present war has shown that what are called siege guns in this paragraph are used all along the fighting line. Guns that run from 7 to 10 and even 16 inches in caliber are carted along the roads on great caterpillar trucks, and they fire high explosive bombs into the air, which descend upon the lines upon the other side; and those who have seen the photographs brought home by Frederick Palmer, and others as well, have seen that when a line of men have forced their way through the enemy's first line of defense, the defenders instantly make an absolute line of shells exploding in the trench that has already been taken, so as to prevent the coming up of reinforcements. It is well known that the attack at Loos in Flanders was a complete success, except that Kitchener's new army could not come up because of the line of fire of those heavy explosives. Advices from the other side, from all quarters, are that officers and men in every letter say, "Give us more big guns and the shells and ammunition." New varieties of ammunition are introduced. Instead of mere shrapnel, we have what is called the high explosive shell that tears up everything in its vicinity.

Now, the cost of all those things is what is before us, not what we shall provide. I am free to say that, in my opinion, the appliances of modern warfare in the way of artillery can not be provided for less than $300 a man. But this is a small sum if distributed over a period of 10 years. A man in the Army costs $1,000 a year, which would be $10,000 for 10 years, and provision for adequate artillery supplies for a man at the end of 10 years would be only $30 a year, in order to have full equipment for that man at the end of 10 years. It is cheap, it is the only cheap way, to spend your money on arms and ammunition and on educated officers. If ever we are to organize, arm, and discipline militia, the whole body of the Nation, we must have the arms with which to train them from artillery down, and we must have the educated officers to do the training. As I have said before, I say now, we should make much larger appropriations for arms and officers. Such appropriations will be large compared to what we have given for these purposes, but small compared to what we spend otherwise. They will not enlarge our standing army, they will provide military schools of, say, 50,000 cadets, and educate 10,000 officers a year who will go into the community, train our militia and schoolboys, and help them to know how to do their work in case of need. They will provide ample arms and ammunition, so that if we call the Nation to arms, which God forbid, we shall not be in the agony of the nations of Europe at the present time for want of officers and matériel. Our men would spring armed and equipped at the call to serve their country, and meanwhile it would make for peace that every nation in the world would know that we had that preparation and were able to resist in a case of need.

Before closing I want to thank the committee and the gentleman in charge of the bill for the courtesy that they have shown me. I want to submit rather to that gentleman than to this committee whether he should not consent at least to the enlargement of the contract power herein provided on the principles I have indicated. Now I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming for a question.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has covered the matter on which I desired to interrogate him.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Very well; I thank you all. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, with much of what the gentleman from New Jersey has said I am in accord. I took occasion yesterday in presenting the bill to the committee to say that the great surprise of the European war had been the tremendous increase in the use of artillery and the expenditure of ammunition in connection with the artillery. It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to what shall be expended at any given period of peace time touching guns and ammunition. Manifestly, we are going to spend in the years to come a great deal more than is being carried in this bill, but it does not follow from that that we should carry at this time all that we finally expect to expend for the purpose.

The gentleman from New Jersey has frankly called attention to the very great increases that we have made over former appropriations. My first connection with this subject was when I went as a minority member on the committee on fortifications, with the Hon. Walter Smith as chairman of that committee. He was never able to bring himself to the appreciation at all of the viewpoint of the Army touching the need of mobile artillery and ammunition for an army of some 500,000 men, which was the plan then suggested.

If gentlemen will look over the old debates in this House and look over the bills of this House, they will find that Mr. Smith used all the power of his splendid personality—and he was a man of considerable power and ability—to prevent the expenditure of any large sum for either of these purposes. The average appropriation for ammunition was about $150,000. The very first thing I tried to do when I came in charge of the committee was to increase the amount, particularly for ammunition, because we had provided guns very much more rapidly than we had provided ammunition for them, and I wanted to create a balance, so I jumped the appropriation from $150,000 to $300,000; then to $600,000; then to $900,000; then to $1,200,000, and now we are coming in here with an appropriation for ammunition of $2,700,000. The contract authorization is a million and a half, making $4,200,000 cash, and we have increased the appropriation for guns.

We are not in as bad condition as we were in the old days. We have built or building now 225 batteries of field guns. The old scheme of the Greble Board contemplated 323 batteries. So we have come within sight of the end of that scheme. The appropriations that are carried this year, including those that will be carried in the Army bill, which, I understand, for guns and ammunition, will run somewhere around $6,000,000, would carry us very near the completion of the Greble Board report. It is true that the report that has been made by some officers recently, known as the Treat Board report, goes way beyond anything ever dreamed of before. Their recommendations, as modified by the staff and further modifications suggested by the Chief of Ordnance, would cause an expenditure of considerably over $300,000,000 in order to supply guns and ammunition. That board's report had just been made at the time the hearings were had on the bill. It was laid before the committee and is printed in its entirety, with the exception of a very few confidential statements, in the hearings. It has never been formally acted upon by the War Department. The committee allowed every dollar that was asked by the War Department for guns and ammunition. I believe in doing that we went as far as we could in reason.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman feel, under the circumstances and with such a report, that he could enlarge the contract discretion of the War Department so that if they come to the conclusion that they ought to have it they can have it? I do not insist on the first amendment so much as on the second.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman from New Jersey is laboring under a misapprehension as to contract authorization. Contract authorization does not mean that that amount of money shall be expended with private manufacturers. Some of it may be, all of it may be, or none of it may be. What is meant is that the department shall have the right to enter into contracts either with the arsenals or private manufacturers for material and supplies, and so forth, necessary to make this equipment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But I asked the gentleman whether they ought not to have discretion to make such an arrangement in view of that report.

Mr. SHERLEY. I see no particular reason why we should increase the contract authorization any more than the cash. The whole question that confronts the committee is whether it is prepared to spend more than we are now recommending. We are recommending $10,000,000, and the Army bill will certainly carry at least $6,000,000. That is simply for field guns and ammunition, and has no relation to small arms and a great many other things, such as hand grenades and other things to which the gentleman referred. That would make as a minimum at least $16,000,000 that we are expending, and that is no inconsiderable sum. A great deal of this money should be expended in new types. Heretofore the largest gun that we have built for field service has been a 6-inch howitzer. Most of the guns that we have built have been 3-inch guns.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. The 3-inch gun was prior to the breaking out of the European war, perhaps with the exception of the German view, considered the most important field weapon. It is still considered the most important field weapon whenever the warfare is of a mobile character; but the European warfare very rapidly, except upon the eastern front, degenerated from a mobile warfare into a trench warfare, where men on each side dug themselves into deep trenches; and while the 3-inch and other like guns were sufficient to clear away the ordinary obstructions such as barbed-wire entanglements, they were not sufficient to absolutely obliterate the trenches so as to destroy the men that were in them. As a result of that the Germans, who had built presumably for the destruction of land fortifications very heavy siege guns, proceeded to use those siege guns as against the trenches, and the allies in turn have, as far as they have been able to supply themselves with heavy ordnance, been using such heavy ordnance guns in their trench warfare.

It is, in my judgment, not at all certain that we will ever want in America anything like the extremely heavy guns that the Germans use. We probably will want, as I stated yesterday, a gun of about 9 inches or better, with a projectile weighing at least 400 pounds. That would be sufficient to destroy trenches, and inasmuch as we do not need guns to destroy land fortifications, such as the Germans need, we would not have to go to the higher types. This money that we are providing will be expended for a number of the old types of guns, and something over a million dollars of it will be expended in developing heavier new-type guns. In about eight months we will have another bill become a law. On the 4th of March of next year another fortification bill will have become a law, and we will be in a position to supplement, and will unquestionably supplement, the items carried here to continue this work. In the meanwhile to put more money than this in the hands of the department would either mean that it would be unwisely spent, because of lack of time to apportion its expenditure, or that it would not be expended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee recommended $10,000,000. What is that supposed to cover?

Mr. SHERLEY. That covers two items, one for the purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon and the other for ammunition therefor. We also carry very nearly that much for seacoast cannon and ammunition; but the gentleman has been addressing himself entirely to mobile artillery and the ammunition therefor. In view of this situation, while I share with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] some of his views as to the revelations that have come from the European war and realize that we have all got to readjust our ideas, to think in new terms, yet we have shown a disposition to go forward. We have gone 500 per cent in advance of what has been done heretofore. We are not going to have a million men to equip overnight; we are not going to have 500,000 men to equip overnight, despite the prophecies of many people; and we are supplying guns and ammunition at a very fair rate of speed, and are going to continue to do so. To now go forward with an expenditure of fifteen or twenty million dollars in excess of what the committee has recommended, which is involved in the amendments of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] seems to me to be unwarranted.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. FARR. How many men could we equip now?

Mr. SHERLEY That depends entirely upon the standard that you adopt. Under the Greble Board system we had a standard of 3.19 guns for every thousand rifles and sabers, and for an Army of 500,000 it was estimated we would need 323 batteries of 4 guns each, which would have been about 1,292 guns. We have supplied 225 batteries now. On that old ratio we will be in a position now to equip about 400,000 men, but the recommendation of the Treat Board contemplated a ratio, as I recall, of 4.9 for a thousand rifles and sabers, and contemplated an Army of something over a million men. It also made changes in the size of armament and siege guns that run not simply up to 6-inch howitzers, which was our largest piece, but also up to 9 and 11 inch, and it very gradually increased the quantity of ammunition that should be supplied for each gun—increased it by several hundred per cent. The result of that program would be, as I stated a while ago, to give us an expenditure of over $300,000,000 as against some $26,000,000 that was involved in order to complete the Greble Board report. However, you must realize that while the European war is illuminating, it is not necessarily determinate upon us, because you have conditions there that will not in all human probability confront us even in the event of invasion of our shores by an emeny. You would not have the same character of warfare.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may have five minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may have five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to ask the gentleman, under the new report for how many men have we artillery?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I have not worked that out.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It would not be over 100,000, would it?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; I think it would be over 250,000.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But we have no big guns at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to qualify that statement. There are certain types of guns we have not at all.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How as to ammunition? For how many men would we have ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. As to ammunition, I have not worked that out.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It would not be over 100,000, would it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it would. Now the gentleman is guessing——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am.

Mr. SHERLEY. And so am I.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. What I desire to say is, while this is still a matter of guesswork and such enormous suggestions are made as to what we might need, does not the gentleman think it better to give discretion to the War Department by giving sufficient appropriations for them to supply what may be thought necessary?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I think the War Department's judgment is better than either that of the gentleman from New Jersey or myself. We have given every dollar asked.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But that was some time ago that they asked for it.

Mr. SHERLEY. They asked for it about two months ago. It was that long ago, but not longer than that. They are now having hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs for this exact purpose. If there is any tremendous need it can be reached there, and I do not think the committee is subject to censure——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not.

Mr. SHERLEY. When it brings in a recommendation that exactly tallies with the recommendation made by the department, and it is several hundred per cent over anything that has been done heretofore.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. And which goes beyond the estimate of the department.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; we do not go beyond the estimate as to this particular item.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I thought it was $2,400,000 in the estimate and $2,800,000 in the amount appropriated as stated here in the report. The gentleman has been bold; I was only asking him to be bold.

Mr. SHERLEY. The probability is that difference is shown by something that developed in the hearing and was not the initiation of the committee, which I do not now recall.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman only to recognize I am giving him credit of being a brave and strong man, and I am not criticizing the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I appreciate what the gentleman says personally, but whatever credit or blame should come to me is inconsequential in face of the tremendous interest of the country that we are facing. I am presenting to this committee my best judgment and claim nothing for that but ask the candid judgment of the Committee of the Whole, but I do not believe we are warranted in adopting the amendment of the gentleman and expending $15,000,000 more money than we are recommending.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I really believe the gentleman may think it is not warranted, but we ought to do so.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do.

Mr. FARR. How many additional men can be equipped if the provisions of this measure are carried out?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not undertaken to figure it out in that form. The gentleman will realize that they are asking me exceedingly technical questions. You have first to get your basis. Now, I have stated what the basis of the Grebel Board's report was, but the Treat Board's report makes another new one. Now, that has never been approved. There have been recommendations changing it in quite a number of particulars by the staff. There are other recommendations and changes by the Chief of Ordnance, and I am not prepared to say just what the standard will be, and not knowing that I can not make a mathematical calculation.

Mr. FARR. Did I understand the gentleman to say we could now equip about 400,000 men?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that, speaking by and large, we could unquestionably equip with field artillery about that number of men.

Mr. FARR. And how many more under this provision?

Mr. SHERLEY. Under what we are providing—oh, well, with what we are carrying and what the Army bill will carry we will probably have completed nearly the old Grebel Board scheme, which was a scheme for 500,000 men, but if you change the ratio of guns from three to five, you correspondingly reduce the number of men.

Mr. FARR. About 50,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is just an equation problem that one man can work out as well as another.

Mr. FARR. In other words, we will be able to equip about 450,000 men?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no doubt we will be able to equip the first two or three months more men than we would get.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have long been of the opinion that we should more rapidly than we have been doing increase our reserve of mobile artillery and ammunition therefor. I have discussed that matter briefly in almost every fortification bill that has been reported in the last few years. I discussed it in the bill of last year. When the bill of last year was before the House, I did not offer an amendment increasing the amount because I felt that those directly in charge of the bill had given the matter careful study and perhaps after all their judgment was better than mine.

It is a matter of very great gratification to me that the subcommittee saw fit to so largely increase the appropriation for these services. The bill of last year appropriated for mobile artillery of all classes, and for ammunition for the same, the sum of $1,910,000. This year for those purposes, in direct appropriation and authorization, the bill carries $10,521,000. Had I been a member of the subcommittee I think, as great as that increase is, I should have been inclined to have urged it be made larger, because, it seems to me, these are features and factors of a plan of reasonable and proper preparedness that must be provided for generously if we are to be reasonably prepared for war contingency.

We should have a large number of rifles. We have approximately 1,000,000 and we are increasing that number at the rate, I think, of about 150,000 a year. We should have a goodly supply of mobile artillery. No lesson of the European war is quite so clear and so striking as the increased use of artillery and the enormous waste or use of ammunition for that artillery. We have been gradually increasing our reserves of mobile artillery, principally 3-inch guns, and guns of other sizes, until we have, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has stated, about 225 batteries completed, or nearly so. If to-day or to-morrow or next year we were to be threatened by an invasion——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARDY). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. If we were this year or next year to be threatened with an invasion in force, if we were to have war with any first-class nation, we would need immediately and forthwith at least twice the number of field batteries we now have. On the basis of the recommendation as to the number of guns per thousand men contained in the report of the Treat Board, we could not at this time equip completely more than 200,000 men with field artillery. We should have a larger reserve supply than that. And yet I shall not suppport the increase proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], although I agree with his views on the subject very largely, because the committee has, in the first place, granted all that was asked for, and approximately $400,000 more, and in addition to that, taking everything into consideration, the number of these guns and the amount of this ammunition that we could manufacture in Government arsenals and that we can secure at a reasonable rate under contract, I believe the committee has gone quite far enough in its increase.

I do believe, however, that this item should be increased another year, because if there is one crying need above another in the matter of preparation it is for increased reserves of field artillery. Upon that class of weapons of defense we must finally depend if our coast is ever invaded, and if it be true—I do not believe it is—but if it be true, as great military or alleged military experts have stated, that any great nation with large numbers of men under arms and sufficient transports can land those men swiftly, certainly, and surely against any offense that we can offer by the hundreds of thousands, it is highly important that we shall have these reserves that will be necessary to meet that kind of a force if it ever comes. However, I am not expecting it. But we can provide all of the reserves of mobile artillery that there is any possibility of our ever needing for about what it would cost to build the battle and scout cruisers we are providing for in the pending naval bill. It is true that the Treat Board's estimate is $400,000 000 for this class of material, guns and ammunition. But that is based on an army, as I recall, of 1,500,000 men.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] signals "one," which I presume means 1,000,000—based on an army of 1,000,000 men. It is doubtful if we need so great a reserve, for even though we raised an army of a million men they would never need so large a number of field guns per thousand as was proposed by the Treat Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has been discussing makes a deep impression upon me. He has been discussing possibilities; things that might occur; things that should be taken into account by those who are preparing the coast defenses of the country; things that should be considered by those who are buying armament, by those who are employing and enlisting men for the service of the country. He led me to believe that if these things he regards as being important are important to the welfare of the country, it is important also that our general defensive foundations should be secure. And I am not satisfied that our foundations are secure upon the land or sea unless we provide some place within the capes for the ships to go in in the event of an attack.

That is the reason I started a little while ago to discuss the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, which, I say, is as important to the United States as is the Kiel Canal to Germany. Millions for vessels to go upon the sea, millions for officers and men to risk their lives in these vessels, but no place to go when they return with an adverse fleet chasing them. Drive them into the Chesapeake Bay and they stop there, blockaded from the outside; and gentlemen preparing for our fortifications object to our discussing an item to open up a passageway to let them through to a navy yard.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield. The gentleman knows that he has been treated with more courtesy by me than he could under the conditions have expected, in view of what he assured me in private conversation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the gentleman that I have also been courteous. The gentleman has objected to my having a little extra time during the course of this debate. The gentleman has permitted other gentlemen to proceed ad libitum, and he has proceeded ad libitum himself, notwithstanding I told him privately that I wanted to discuss the Chesapeake & Delaware matter. The gentleman has singled me out to object to my proceeding. If the gentleman wants to fight on that line, I am prepared to fight.

Mr. SHERLEY. You always are.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When I believe I have something worthy to present to the House I propose to present it, and if the gentleman wants to object he can object. I will proceed within my rights, and the gentleman may proceed within his rights; but I give notice to the Chair that I expect recognition equally with any other Member of this House when I rise properly and under the rules, and I do not expect to be shut off.

I declare again, with due respect to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], whose hard work in preparing this bill I cheerfully recognize, that this building of a great superstructure of fortifications, Army and Navy, without preparing an adequate foundation, is foolhardy and it would not occur in any country in the world save this. Gentlemen propose to expend untold millions buying armament, rearing factories, against which in other times they inveigh, entering Government ownership for construction, which they in their secret councils oppose. Then when a proposition is made to build a waterway or harbor of defense for the protection of our men and all these millions in property, they object to a five-minute discussion on this floor. I say, and I repeat, that the expert thinkers in the Army and Navy of the country want a place for these vessels to go, not necessarily the great armed ships that are to sail the seas—the battleships—but the newer type of vessels, the submarines, and so forth, which require new conditions and which can not forever remain at sea. The gentleman does not want me to discuss coast defenses.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARDY). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that point will be insisted upon until I am heard. Now, the gentleman can operate under his rights.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 14303, the fortifications appropriation bill, had found itself without a quorum; that thereupon the Chairman ordered the roll to be called in accordance with the provision of the rule, and 181 Members answered "present," and the following Members had failed to answer to their names, and he presented the following list of absentees:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee having found itself without a quorum, he ordered the roll to be called; whereupon there were disclosed present 182 Members, and he submits the names of the absentees to be recorded on the Journal.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order——

The SPEAKER. You can not do it. The committee will resume its sitting.

Accordingly the committee resumed its session, with Mr. HOUSTON in the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether there is a pro forma amendment pending or not.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have an amendment pending.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is an amendment pending, one offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. MANN. I want to get a little information, if I can. This item provides for mountain, field, and siege cannon. Is that one general description, or is there a difference between mountain, field, and siege cannon?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a difference between mountain, field, and siege cannon. Mountain cannon are cannon of small caliber, capable of being transported by pack animals. Field cannon are cannon of various degrees, that may run up to and actually include siege cannon; but usually by siege cannon is meant very heavy cannon used in the siege of fortified places.

Mr. MANN. Are these cannon in the main made by the Government, or are they obtained through contracts?

Mr. SHERLEY. Both methods have been followed. In the immediate past we have been making in the arsenals most of making a large part of the carriages and of the caissons.

Mr. MANN. Are these reserve cannon?

Mr. SHERLEY. Some of them are held as reserve. Some of them have been actually issued to the troops. They are the cannon supposed to be necessary to supply the Regular Army and the volunteer army as distinguished from the militia. Similar types of cannon are provided for the militia out of funds carried in the Army bill.

Mr. MANN. But not in this bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. But not in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Where are these reserves placed?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are kept at various arsenals of the Government. I could not state from memory. I think the hearings either this year or in the past will show.

Mr. MANN. Those provided for in this bill, for instance, will just be stored?

Mr. SHERLEY. They will be stored. Some of the larger ones of the newer types will be issued to the troops for practice, probably being sent to the practice school at Fort Sill.

Mr. MANN. That is also true of the ammunition, I take it?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 4, line 1, after the words "manufacture at the arsenals," strike out "$2,821,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 4, line 5, after the word "exceed," in line 4, strike out "$3,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 15, noes 52.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $2,700,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $1,500,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I believe I have two amendments pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments are pending to this paragraph. The Clerk will report the first of the two amendments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does that preclude offering other amendments to this paragraph? These amendments have not yet been read.

Mr. MANN. They were read previously.

The CHAIRMAN. When these amendments are disposed of other amendments can be offered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Were these amendments offered by unanimous consent—because the paragraph had not been read?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. They have not yet been offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey announced that he had four amendments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My recollection is that the amendments were read at the conclusion of the paragraph preceding this paragraph. No amendments have been offered to this paragraph, unless they were offered by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. They were simply read for information.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is my understanding that they were read for information, with the understanding that the gentleman from New Jersey would offer them when the paragraph was read. I presume he now desires, under that understanding, to offer them.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I desire to do so. I agreed that I would not debate them any further.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey if he desires to offer the amendments. Otherwise I should like to speak to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 4, line 10, after the word "arsenals," strike out "$2,700,000" and insert "$5,000,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 4, line 14, after the word "exceed," in line 13, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$5,000,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

This paragraph provides for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon. This sort of matériel must be transported to the various coast defenses where it is presumed to be required. There are several ways of getting it there; one by rail, which in the event of war may be very readily overthrown, one by wagon road, which is very difficult, and the other by water. The cheaper method in time of peace for this sort of transportation would be by water. [Applause.] That induces me to say that I would have concluded by remarks about the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal long before this, and there would have been no point of no quorum, if I had been permitted to proceed as other gentlemen have been permitted to proceed; this being a matter of supreme importance to this Nation, and being over the cannon. We have been making all of the guns and have been looked by many of those in charge of the bills having to do with our coast defenses and other means of preparedness.

I was reading a little while ago from the report of the Agnus Commission, with respect to the naval and Army importance of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. I had reached that point where the commission spoke of the great importance for naval purposes of a waterway to connect the navy yards along the Atlantic seaboard, and to give the vessels of the high-seas fleet, if driven in, a place to go for repairs, since they would be now blocked absolutely, with the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal in its present condition. This board, made up of distinguished naval and military men, reported to Congress as follows:

The Civil War developed the enormous value of the present canal as a means of transportation of troops, supplies, and prisoners. While our railroad facilities have greatly increased since that time it is easily conceivable that in future wars or international disturbances—

These gentlemen you see were looking forward as we ought to be—the proposed ship canal would very likely prove an important adjunct to rail transportation and possibly a vital factor in campaigns should rail transportation be interrupted by accidents, strikes, or hostile raids.

And here, parenthetically, I call attention to the fact that all railroad communication between the North and the South could be overthrown in an hour by one foreign vessel entering the present unprotected Delaware Bay, and we would have to resort to new means of communication and new methods of transportating the matériel for which this bill provides. One vessel up the Delaware River, shooting up the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania Railroads, or landing enough men to tear them up, would deprive the South of communication with the North and utterly shut off the North from the South, and if our enemies had the seas, God save the country! If we had an open waterway, such as is proposed, between the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays, we could resort to strategy, repair or equip our ships, get the Navy out at one of two approaches, meet the enemy and drive him back. But we have not provided for that. This Agnus board had this in mind when it said further in its report:

The experts of the present naval General Board would be satisfied for the canal to pass vessels of 16-foot draft and 60-foot beam; in other words, monitors, torpedo boats, and destroyers. The commission fully agrees that the principal naval uses of the proposed canal would probably be as stated and is inclined to think that for present purposes a canal of 30-foot or perhaps of even 27-foot draft would be ample. It further believes that just as many battleships will be required with as without the canal, as it would plainly not be within the province of the heaviest of the fighting units to remain in harbor entrance for local defense.

However, it is the opinion of the commission that the experts look too much to victory and ignore such conditions as defeat or at least heavy punishment in battle.

I am afraid that some of our preparedness friends are inclined to ignore these suggestions about "defeat" or "heavy punishment in battle." Some of us are "jingoes"; we pay little attention to the foundations and put too much in the superstructure. We depend too much on preparedness parades and too little on enlistments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. I object.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of getting some information. I notice that later on there is a provision for the purchase of certain discoveries and inventions. I would like to know whether there is any discretion in any part of the War Department or the Government so that if a man comes along with an invention that would seem to be desirable from a national standpoint, there is any way that the invention can be tentatively or permanently acquired?

Mr. SHERLEY. The Board of Ordnance and Fortification has an appropriation to enable that board to investigate inventions that may be submitted to it, either through outsiders or persons connected with the Government, and to determine upon the desirability of acquiring or adopting them. There are funds that are available, as these funds are, for general purposes. They are not limited by law, although there is a working understanding between the department and the committee reporting the bill that carries the fund as to the purpose that is intended to be served by the money asked and allowed.

Mr. BENNET. Suppose we were in a condition of more or less imminent danger, which might occur, and here is an item of $2,700,000 rather general in its nature. Under the decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury and under the practice, if there were any question which was vital, would this board have authority to purchase such invention and pay for it out of the appropriation?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am inclined to think technically they could, but I am also of the impression that if the invention was one requiring a large sum of money to acquire, unless there was very great need the department would submit it to Congress. There are small things that would be acquired. For instance, the other day there was brought to my attention an improvement in regard to searchlights by a forced draft of air on the carbon whereby a smaller-sized carbon could be used and the most intense heat applied without the flaking of it so as to give a beam from a smaller center, and thereby produce a much clearer and better light. I went to the Washington Barracks and observed one of those lights in camparison with the present standard light, and it seemed to me very much superior, as it did to the officers making the test. They would have funds for the procurement of searchlights and would unquestionably be warranted in expending the money for that more modern and improved type.

Mr. BENNET. Would that include the authority to buy the patent, which in that particular case, I suppose, would be of no benefit?

Mr. SHERLEY. In that instance there might be a payment of a royalty, but when there was need of purchasing a patent and it would not cost a great amount of money they would exercise their judgment and proceed. But in a matter such as the Hammond patent, the department properly feels that it should submit to Congress and get a direct appropriation.

Mr. BENNET. For two reasons—that they want to control the patent, and the sum is too large.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not only that; but to divert so large a sum from the purpose for which the appropriation was intended, while technically it is permissible, under the wording of some of the appropriations it would not be thought to be keeping full faith with Congress.

Mr. BENNET. I am glad to know that there is in the Government that power, and that if an inventor comes along with an invention of real merit he can go to the Government to have it tested, and, if proved valuable, find a purchaser in the Government. I am correct in both assumptions, am I not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $1,284,500: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $3,000,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The importance of getting these various munitions of war to the coast defenses by rail, wagon road, or waterway is self-evident. Having referred to it before, I feel that there is no need of enlarging upon that subject, but as to having "your house in order," with respect to having your foundations firm before you take chances on what you are rearing over them, I wish to continue the reading of the report of the Agnus Commission, which, with respect to the confidence we may call it—the abiding confidence of a few of our military experts and preparedness paraders, ought to be read in full to the country. [Applause.]

The board said in its report:

However, it is the opinion of the commission that the experts look too much to victory and ignore such conditions as defeat or at least heavy punishment in battle. While the general board of the Navy may not recognize the probability of transference of the battle fleet as a whole through the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal it is not difficult to conceive of that fleet, badly crippled in a general engagement at sea, limping home in detail to be divided for repairs among several such navy yards as Norfolk, League Island, and New York.

Listen, gentlemen, to this commission, which talks of the possibility of defeat—a condition which some of the jingoists fail to recognize—"the possibility of defeat"; the possibility of your "battleships limping back home," and being bottled up somewhere without an opportunity to get into a navy yard.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that our independence was won through the masterly retreats of George Washington, who never won a battle?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Our defeats in several wars were signal. We usually overcame them in the end, though it cost us heavily; but I would see to it that our house is prepared and kept in order in the United States [applause] before I sat back in my easy-chair and congratulated myself that because I was making appropriations to buy war munitions without sufficient men to use them, everything was all right. I would want to be better prepared than that.

This board in 1907 spoke of various navy yards to which these crippled ships in the event of defeat might have to go.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In a moment. I continue to read from the report of that board:

When repairs are finished the safer and better way to assemble would be by way of the ship canal, either to the Delaware or the Chesapeake.

Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with the most populous section of the country; where the great wealth is, where the assault would most likely come, where we would have need for the greatest and strongest defenses; and we are denying ourselves a chance to get to a navy yard with a crippled ship. We are spending money to buy munitions of war without providing the means to use or save the ship after we have furnished it with munitions of war. I now yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. KEATING. I want to say that I have followed the gentleman's remarks with a great deal of interest. I think they are very illuminating. I was wondering how much it would cost to build this canal.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would cost less by one-half to rebuild this canal and take it over than it costs to build one battleship. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Colorado, because I want the active and intelligent Members from that State, who come from a mountainous interior, to better understand the need for defenses along the coast. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I am pleased to obtain the information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KEATING. And I would say further that we have irrigating canals in Colorado that are probably much larger than the canal the gentleman proposes to construct between the Chesapeake and the Delaware.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the gentleman has had Government assistance in some form or other with which to build them. I trust we may have the gentleman's assistance now that we are asking for an essential waterway on the east coast to shield the fleet and protect the people of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in view of the interruptions, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for seacoast cannon, and for modernizing projectiles on hand, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $3,000,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $3,500,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When interrupted five minutes ago I was reading from the report of what is known as the Agnus Commission, which was forwarded to Congress in 1907, Congress not having paid much attention to it since, although it has been voting enormously for an increased Army and Navy and for the purchase of matériel. The conclusion of that report is as follows:

It is the opinion of the commission that aside from commercial uses the construction of the proposed canal will be of great strategic value as an adjunct to our land and naval forces.

Mr. Chairman, that was the report of the Agnus Commission. I have read from the Craighill Commission report and from the Dewey Commission report, and I am going to read now from the report which we may call the Bixby-Black Commission, Gen. Bixby having then been Chief of Engineers, and Gen. Black, now Chief of Engineers, United States Army, having been on that board. These gentlemen, by instruction from Congress, made another survey of the situation, with a view to the commercial as well as to the military and naval importance of the opening up of this waterway by the Government. Time had elapsed since the Agnus Commission report; there were new conditions confronting both the Army and the Navy, and this commission brought its report up to date. It said:

The usefulness of such portions of this inland waterway as were in existence at the outbreak of the Civil War was thoroughly proved in the operations at that time.

For the movement of troops, sheltered water transportation affords many advantages over transportation by rail.

That is a simple, plain, common-sense statement of preparing yourself for what may come. The report continued:

The number of transportation units required for a division of troops with field equipment, rations and forage for three days, is by rail 958 passenger and freight cars; by water 12 ships of 20-foot draft like the Kentuckian or 22 ships of 16-foot draft like the Momus.

Think of it! Here is a waterway that you will not open up on which 20 vessels could carry as much in the way of munitions of war and troops as 958 passenger and freight cars could carry. [Applause on the Republican side.] Yet with one shot from a ship coming into the unprotected Delaware Bay the coastal railroads north and south could be wiped from the face of the map. This board knew what it was talking about. It understood the business for which it was appointed. It continued:

For naval purposes it is necessary here only to invite attention to the very great advantage to be attained by providing an additional and protected entrance for each of the ports from New York to Norfolk—

No city is specially benefited in that; there is no pet project and no individual or locality, but it is proposed to take care of all the ports from New York to Norfolk—an advantage which would make impossible—

Make impossible, says the report—

an effective blockade of any one of these ports.

Is it of no consequence to gentlemen preparing for our coast defenses that the opening up of this passageway would make it impossible to operate against any one of our great cities along the Atlantic seaboard? Let the gentlemen from the interior of the country think it over. I commend it to their good judgment. The report goes on to say:

From the above it is evident that the construction of the canal would add greatly to the defensive strength of the United States.

Now, with the indulgence of the gentleman from Kentucky and the members of the committee, I want to proceed to read from the last report which I desire to quote, and with this I hope to close this statement, which I am very glad to have the opportunity of making, even if it has been made under difficulties. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Recently the Senate of the United States, which, under the rules, I am forbidden to quote by name, seeing the importance of improving our coast defenses and protecting the entire country from California to New Jersey by improving the waterways along the Atlantic seaboard, instituted an investigation of its own, and in consequence a commission was appointed, which we may call the Macomb Commission, headed by Brig. Gen. M. M. Macomb, Chief of the War College, and Brig. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss. Their report was signed by Lindley M. Garrison, Secretary of War, dated February 27, 1915, and brought this whole topic down to date.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-five Members are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill H. R. 14303, the fortifications appropriation bill, had found itself without a quorum; that thereupon the Chairman ordered the roll to be called in accordance with the provisions of the rules, and 187 Members answered "Present," and the following Members had failed to answer to their names, and he presented the following list of absentees:

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words preliminary to asking the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to inquire where this ammunition for seacoast guns is manufactured, whether by private plants or Government plants or both?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is manufactured by both.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. By which to the greater extent?

Mr. SHERLEY. In the past the greater portion of it has been manufactured by the Government. The large increases that are being provided for will, in the absence of the enlargement of the arsenals, require a greater proportion to be obtained from private manufacturers than has been true in the immediate past.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, is there more than one private plant capable of manufacturing this class of ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. As to certain classes of it there is, as to certain other classes it is a question whether there are plants other than the Bethlehem Steel Co. plant.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, I am glad to see the proviso which authorizes the Chief of Ordnance to make contracts for a larger amount than the direct appropriation. I was talking not long ago with a gentleman who was largely engaged in the manufacturing of artillery ammunition for the cannon of European powers, though of a smaller caliber than required by this class of guns, he being only engaged in the manufacture of field artillery. He told me, in the course of this conversation, it would require over six months' time before any of the manufacturers of this country were able to arrange for the manufacture even of this comparatively small size of field artillery ammunition. I would take it it would require considerable more time to make the necessary provision in any factory to manufacture the large ammunition required for these seacoast guns. And I hope the Chief of Ordnance will carry out the provision which authorizes him to contract for a further supply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for seacoast artillery practice, including the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $490,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph pertains to purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for seacoast artillery practice.

Well, of course, if these munitions are to be gotten to the various points where they are to be employed in the service of the Government, there must be avenues of approach. I have already indicated from official reports that in war times railroads may be in danger, earth roads may be cumbersome and unavailable, and that the chief method of getting to these coast defenses, anyhow, is by water. That is shown by the official reports.

But when interrupted a little while ago I had drawn attention to the Macomb report on the subject of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, which affords limited approaches to our coast defenses, and would, in the opinion of military and naval experts, be of inestimable value for Government purposes in the event of war.

In the early part of these serial remarks I spoke of the fact that during the Civil War, when the railroads were disabled and incapable of moving north or south of Perryville, Md., this old canal carried the troops that helped to save the Capital when it was in great danger. It has not been improved in the matter of depth or width since that time, although commerce is forcing its way through to the extent of 1,000,000 tons a year, a very important factor in our commercial life.

Submarines and small boats like torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers have attempted to use this pathway in times of peace, but there is not sufficient water to carry them through. In one instance, with which I am familiar, when four torpedo boats were to be moved from the Philadelphia Navy Yard to the Charleston Navy Yard, I asked the Secretary of the Navy not to send them outside, where they might run into the dangers of Cape Hatteras, but to send them inside through the waterways, where they would be amply protected in case of storm. The Secretary replied that he would very much like to do so, but that the waterways were not of sufficient depth to permit of the passage of these vessels. The four ships were sent outside; they struck a storm off Hatteras and some were blown to sea, so that other vessels had to go after them. Some of them were run in and one, I think, was thrown on the beach. What the whole cost of repairing these vessels was I do not know. Fortunately, as I recall, no lives were lost. But I say that to permit a waterway that could be improved and made serviceable for torpedo boats and submarines with an expenditure of $8,000,000, including the purchase price, to stand unavailable for the use of these ships in times of peace or to remain useless in times of war is an oversight and a blunder which can not be too often called to the attention of Congress and the people of the country. Such a waterway should be open in order to safeguard the property of the Government in times of peace and to be available for vessels that are damaged in time of war. These vessels should have the way open and ready for passage at all times from one point to another inside the coast line, and especially in the event of an attacking fleet being upon the outside or blockading one or the other of the exits or entrances. The Kiel Canal has but one exit and one entrance, and that has been the salvation of the German Navy. The Chesapeake Bay is one entrance and exit and the Delaware Bay is another entrance and exit. They are easily 200 miles apart, and they could be connected inland by deepening a canal 13 miles long, at a cost, including the property, of $8,000,000, which is one-half of the cost of a battleship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, and then I propose to close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. FREAR. What can that canal be bought for to-day?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Two million five hundred thousand dollars is the estimated cost fixed by the engineers.

Mr. FREAR. Is it not true that those who own the canal have refused to put any price on it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think that is true. I have no interest in them except to know who they are generally. I never have had any communication from them. I know the property is there; that their bonds pay a dividend; that far-seeing citizens and Navy and Army men have sought to get this property for the Government; and that the engineers recommend it for strategic purposes. The total cost of making it a submarine depth would be about $8,000,000, and a battleship depth would probably cost about $16,000,000 to $18,000,000, possibly $20,000,000; but even that would approximate the cost of one battleship. That would permit a battleship to run 50 miles inside of the coast line, not for the benefit of one city, but for the protection of the Nation, and perhaps to save a fleet.

A MEMBER. How deep is the canal?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You can send vessels through drawing 9 feet of water; no more. As I said, the Secretary of the Navy refused to send torpedo boats through because there was not sufficient depth. It is blocked, so far as the smaller naval vessels go. It is a hindrance to commerce and a menace to the Nation in its present condition. The Macomb report took full cognizance of this and said:

A canal such as is proposed would allow the whole force of submarines, etc., to be held in one of the two bays and used in equal efficiency in either.

And we have just appropriated for 50 submarines, not one of which could go through the existing canal.

Where are you going to keep them?

Out in the open sea? The men can not live in submarines more than 10 or 15 days at a time. You have got to have some place where they can rest, and they must come inside. When you move them from navy yard to navy yard are you always going to send them out into the ocean; always to be in danger rounding the capes? Surely this is not necessary in times of peace.

This report—the Macomb-Bliss report—refers particularly to the use of this passageway for submarines. It says—

Without the canal the force of submarines, etc., must be divided between the two bays, and to reenforce one another they must attempt a passage by the outside, a distance of over 200 miles, as against about 15 miles by the canal

It is 325 miles from Philadelphia to Baltimore by the outside route and about 100 by the inside route, including the canal, which is between 13 and 14 miles long. So the strategic situation is easily comprehended.

But the Macomb-Bliss report takes even broader ground. Listen to this:

A canal along this line and one from Delaware Bay to New York Harbor would make a landing of hostile troops almost impossible between Narragansett Bay and Chesapeake Bay, and the construction of this canal is an important step toward the accomplishment of this result.

Of course that is common sense. If we had the canal, our vessels could come in and go out both ways. The Atlantic seaboard is of more importance to us than the Kiel Canal territory is to Germany. Without the intercoastal canal the submarine force must be divided between the two bays, and in order for one to reenforce the other the attempt must be made to force a passage through 200 miles of open sea, with all its perils of storm or blockade.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regret, owing to my promise to get through, that I can not yield. These leading up-to-date experts say the proposed inside waterway, if extended to New York Harbor, would make the landing of hostile troops almost impossible between Narragansett Bay and the Chesapeake Bay. That is a statement so significant, considering the tremendous interests involved, that I would not have it forgotten.

This latest board, appointed as I have stated, upon the advice and consent of the Senate, makes this further statement:

As an obstacle and a part of the land defense of Wilmington and Philadelphia a canal suited for other commercial and naval purposes would be of great importance. Defended by a few troops and small gunboats, such an obstacle—of the size recommended below—would hardly be crossed, and it is not believed that it would be attempted.

That is to say, the attempt would not be made by any foreign foe. I read further:

As a means of transport it has a measure of value for the easy transportation of men and matériel between the fortifications of Delaware Bay and of Baltimore.

As to 1 (c), the objects set forth in paragraph 3 above can be obtained by a sea-level canal having a depth of 18 feet at mean low water and a bottom width of about 150 feet. While tides of 6 feet to 10 feet prevail in the waters at the ends of the canal, investigation has shown that guard locks will not be necessary and that an open canal will be entirely feasible.

I shall not read any more, but I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I want to state to the Democratic side of the House that no more ardent advocate of the opening up this passageway can be found than the Secretary of the Navy. No abler deliverance on this subject was ever made than that which was made by the Hon. Josephus Daniels before the waterways convention at Savannah last November. I refer to this to show that this is not a partisan question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For alteration and maintenance of seacoast artillery, including the purchase and manufacture of machinery, tools, materials necessary for the work, and expenses of civilian mechanics and extra-duty pay of enlisted men engaged thereon, $400,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the paragraph, on line 20, relating to the alteration of 3.2-inch batteries. It is one of the few items in regard to which the committee did not allow the full amount of the estimate. As a matter of fact, in a way, this is simply an additional allowance for the manufacture of 3-inch guns or 3-inch batteries, as the 3.2-inch, as I understand it, when taken from these old carriages are used for the land defense of fortifications and the balance of the matériel is used in making up the two 3-inch batteries. In view of the fact that in doing this work we provide both for the needed guns for the land defense of coast fortifications and also increase the sum for 3-inch guns, I wondered why the committee felt justified in cutting this item as much as it did.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will listen to the following letter, I think he will understand the matter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, March 21, 1916.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives.

SIR: It is desired to invite your attention to a matter which had it come to the notice of this office in time would have been brought out during the hearings on the fortification bill, and which is, therefore, now considered as a part of those hearings.

An estimate of $530,000 was submitted for the alteration of 3.2-inch batteries to rapid-fire field batteries. A report just received from the Rock Island Arsenal indicates that while the necessary old matériel is on hand for the purpose of carrying out the work proposed, a recent examination shows that a part of it is in such condition as to render alteration so expensive that the manufacture of new matériel is preferable.

It is therefore desired to recommend that the amount under this heading be reduced by $335,000, and that under the heading "For the purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon," etc., the amount be increased this much. If this change is made, the money so transferred would be used to procure three 3.8-inch howitzer batteries, complete, with their war reserve parts.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance,
United States Army.

Now, I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming that if he will recall, a while ago, when the item in regard to the mountain, field, and siege cannon was under discussion, it was suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] that the committee had gone beyond the estimate, and I suggested then that that was probably due, although I did not recall the exact fact, to something that had developed in the hearings. It appears that that increase was the result of the cutting of this item at the suggestion of the Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. MONDELL. That is certainly a very satisfactory explanation of the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the procurement of the exclusive rights of John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) to their discoveries and inventions in the art of control by radiodynamic energy of the movement of water-borne carriers of high explosives, in accordance with a proposal heretofore made by said John Hays Hammond, jr., and said company, dated March 23, 1916, and known as proposal Z, $750,000: Provided, That said sum shall not be paid unless a report of a board of three Army and three Navy officers, to be appointed by the President, shall be favorable to the acquisition of such rights, such report to be made after a demonstration of the application of the said system to the control of torpedoes; and, to provide for such demonstration, $30,000 of the sum so appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose, may be applied to the expense of conducting the same, exclusive of the services of said Hammond, which services shall be rendered free of charge, the amount so applied and which shall be immediately available, in the event of the purchase of such rights, to be considered as part payment of the purchase price of the same.

The Commissioner of Patents is authorized and directed, in the event of the entrance by the Government into a contract with the abovementioned parties for the purchase of such rights in all instances where it would grant patents to John Hays Hammond, jr., or to the Radio Engineering Co. upon request of the United States to issue said patents to the United States, and the Commissioner of Patents is further authorized and directed to keep applications for such patents in the secret archives of the Patent Office, not open to disclosure even in cases of interferences.

For procurement and installation of one radiodynamic torpedo unit, $417,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer two amendments. One is, on page 7, line 17, to strike out the words "dated March 23, 1916, and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 7, line 17, by striking out the words "dated March 23, 1916, and."

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason for that amendment is that the proposal as now embodied contains a clause that was signed after March 23.

Mr. MANN. It is still known as "proposal Z"?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is now known as "Proposal Z," and that would serve to identify it and not tie it with the original proposal modified.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to submit as a part of my remarks the proposal of John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co., together with the statement of the Acting Secretary of War touching the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the proposal referred to:

John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) submit the following proposal to the United States of America, acceptance thereof to be evidenced by Congress making the appropriation hereinafter specified, namely:

Whereas John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) are the owners of certain discoveries, inventions, improvements, devices, processes, and systems for the control by radiodynamic energy of the movement of water-borne carriers of high explosives suitable to be used in the defense of harbors and waterways; and

Whereas said John Hays Hammond, jr., and the said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) have heretofore demonstrated the practicability, feasibility, and value of said discoveries, inventions, improvements, devices, processes, and systems to the satisfaction of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, United States Army, and its expert assistants, as appears from their reports heretofore made to the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas it is proposed by the United States to provide for a demonstration before a joint Army and Navy board, consisting of three officers from each service, to be appointed by the President of the United States, of said discoveries, inventions, improvements, devices, processes, and systems, for the purpose of determining whether the United States may desire to purchase the right, title, and interest of said Hammond and said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) therein:

Now, therefore, in consideration of the United States providing for the conduct of such demonstration in a sum not exceeding $30,000, said demonstration to be begun within 30 days after notice from said John Hays Hammond, jr. (which said Hammond agrees to give in a reasonable time), and the duration thereof not to exceed 90 days after the beginning of the same, unless extended with the consent of the proposers, the said John Hays Hammond, jr., and the said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) agree to give the service of said John Hays Hammond, jr., free to the said United States in the making of said demonstration for such reasonable period as may be necessary to prepare for and complete said demonstration, upon the understanding that if the purchase is not consummated any property purchased by the United States for such demonstration and not incorporated with the proposers' plant shall belong to the United States, but without license to use the same where it involves any features covered by said inventions, and with the right to the proposers to purchase the same at cost. And the said John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) further agree, at the option of the said United States, to be exercised within 60 days from the conclusion of said demonstration, to enter into the following contract, to wit:

"These articles of agreement, made this — day of ———, 1916, by and between John Hays Hammond, jr., of the city of Gloucester, State of Massachusetts, and the Radio Engineering Co., of New York (Inc.), parties of the first part, and the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, for and on behalf of the United States of America, party of the second part, witnesseth that:

"Whereas the parties of the first part claim to have discovered and invented and to own certain new and useful improvements, devices, and processes in the art of radiodynamic control of water-borne bodies, for which they have obtained certain patents, foreign or domestic, and have made certain applications for the issue of letters patent by the United States of America and by foreign countries wherein the aforesaid improvements, devices, and processes are more particularly set forth, a list of which applications, by serial numbers, is hereto annexed, marked 'Schedule A,' and made a part hereof; and

"Whereas certain of these improvements, devices, and processes made by the parties of the first part as aforesaid are embodied in the applications for patents not yet filed in said patent offices; and

"Whereas the said improvements, devices, and processes hereinbefore referred to are regarded as useful for defensive and other purposes by the party of the second part, and it is desired to acquire on behalf of the United States of America all the said right, title, and interest of the parties of the first part therein and in the said inventions, applications for letters patent, and patents aforesaid: Now, therefore

"In consideration of the premises it is hereby agreed by and between the said parties as follows:

"1. The parties of the first part hereby assign and transfer to the party of the second part all their right, title, and interest in and to the said discoveries, inventions, improvements, devices, and processes, whether for any military, commercial, or other use the party of the second part may make thereof, and in and to any patents, foreign or domestic, already obtained by them, and in and to any applications for patents, foreign or domestic, which may be pending, particularly including the said applications, by them already filed, and in the said schedule set forth, and those unfiled as aforesaid, as fully set forth and described in the specifications forming part of the applications aforesaid, together with all the constructional drawings, experimental data, the use of models and such confidential information and description pertaining to the aforesaid assigned rights as may be controlled by the parties of the first part and requested by the party of the second part; and it is agreed that as to any of the applications in the attached list with respect to which patents have not yet been issued and as to those unfiled as aforesaid the parties of the first part will, upon request of the party of the second part and at its expense, prosecute the applications or file and prosecute them, as the case may be, to a conclusion, and in the event and upon obtaining letters patent covering the inventions, improvements, and devices described in said applications, shall assign to the party of the second part all their right, title, and interest therein, or, at the option of the party of the second part, shall assign said applications so as to have said patents issued in the name of the United States.

"2. It is agreed that the said Hammond shall, without additional charge, give his services in directing the engineers superintending the installation at such point as the party of the second part may designate for the purpose, a unit for the radio dynamic control of moving bodies from a distance, and that for this purpose he shall open up his laboratory to such officers of the United States Army as may be assigned by the Secretary of War to the duty, giving his personal services, free of any charge, in the direction of instructors, to teach them during the period this first installation is being made, actual teaching and laboratory expenses to be borne by the party of the second part as part of the expense of such installation; and that after such first installation is completed the said Hammond shall be employed by the United States of America from time to time as required by the United States, at a per diem salary of $100, to be paid during the time of actual employment and to travel to and fro, and he shall also be paid his actual and reasonable expenses incurred incident to such employment, to be audited as required under the regulations of the War Department, it being, however, understood and agreed that the reasonable convenience of the said Hammond in respect to the services aforesaid shall be at all times consulted, so far as the interests of the party of the second part may permit this to be done, and to this intent that reasonable notice of the time when such services shall be required of the said Hammond shall be given, and that this arrangement as to employment shall continue for one year from the date such first installation is completed and thereafter from year to year until terminated by six months' notice from either party in writing.

"3. It is further agreed that the said Hammond shall use his best efforts during the period covered by his actual employment as herein provided to perfect and improve the said discoveries, inventions, improvements, devices, and processes; and that he will assign and transfer to the United States all his right, title, and interest in and to any additional inventions or improvements which he may make prior to the termination of his employment as herein provided, and which inventions fall within the class covered by these articles of agreement, or could be classified as a development of the same, and he shall, upon the request of the party of the second part and at its expense, take the necessary steps to file and prosecute applications for patents therefor to a conclusion, and in the event and upon obtaining letters patent covering the inventions, improvements, and devices described in said applications, shall assign to the party of the second part all his right, title, and interest therein, or, at the option of the party of the second part, shall assign said applications so as to have said patents issued in the name of the United States. And said Hammond agrees to give as security for the performance by him of the obligations set out in this paragraph a surety-company bond in a reasonable amount, if the same is found to be required by the party of the second part.

"4. The parties of the first part further severally agree that if at any time subsequent to the term of the employment of the said Hammond, herein provided for, said company may own or said Hammond shall make any further discovery or discoveries in relation to the development hereinbefore referred to, they or he will submit the same to the Chief of Coast Artillery, United States Army, and afford reasonable time to him for the acquisition thereof by the party of the second part before offering the same to any other Government, person, or corporation.

"5. And the parties of the first part severally agree not to disclose, nor permit to be disclosed, and will exercise all reasonable precautions to prevent disclosure, to other persons, corporations, or Governments other than those authorized in writing by the Chief of Coast Artillery, United States Army, the process or processes, device or devices, discovery or discoveries, invention or inventions covered by this assignment, or intended so to be.

"6. And the parties of the first part further agree that they will use their best endeavor to place at the service of the party of the second part, if requested, such expert assistants as they may have or be able to secure, at the rates charged by said assistants, and without profit thereon to the parties of the first part; such assistants to be paid by the party of the second part, together with their expenses, which shall be audited as described above.

"7. In consideration of the assignment by the parties of the first part of all their right, title, and interest in and to the inventions, devices, and processes in the art of radio dynamic control of bodies, as described in this agreement, and of the full performance by them severally of the obligations imposed by this agreement, the parties of the first part shall be paid, upon such assignment being executed and delivered, and as authorized by the act of Congress making appropriations for fortifications passed at the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, the sum of $750,000, less any amount not exceeding $30,000 which may be expended in conducting the demonstration required under the terms of the said act of Congress.

"In witness whereof the parties hereto have executed this agreement in triplicate originals, under their respective seals, the day and year first hereinabove written, the name and corporate seal of said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) being hereto affixed and these presents duly signed in the name of its president, thereunto duly authorized.

This proposal is on the further condition that Congress shall in the pending fortification bill appropriate the sum of $750,000, of which amount the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be available for conducting said demonstration, and the balance of the appropriation not expended in such demonstration to be available for payment to said John Hays Hammond, jr., and said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) upon the exercise by the United States of its said option within 60 days after the conclusion of said demonstration, as above provided, and the execution by the undersigned proposers of the foregoing draft of contract, without further action by Congress of the United States.

In witness whereof the said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) and the said John Hays Hammond, jr., have affixed their signatures hereto this —— day of March, 1916; the name of the said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) being hereto affixed by its president, thereunto duly authorized.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 10, 1916.

HON. SWAGAR SHERLEY, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have given consideration to the papers which you left at this department in the matter of the purchase of the inventions of Mr. John Hays Hammond, jr., for the control by radiodynamic energy of torpedoes, etc., under the proposal of Mr. Hammond and his company, dated March 23, 1916, referred to in the item of the pending fortification bill making appropriation for that purpose, and have the honor to return them with the following remarks:

The letters of Mr. Lee De Forest, dated May 12 and May 22, 1916, allege in substance—

(a) That the inventions proposed to be purchased are without merit, or at least of insufficient merit to justify the payment of so large a sum for their purchase by the Government; and

(b) That the claims for patents made in the applications of Mr. Hammond are largely covered by the two basic patents of Rear Admiral B. A. Fiske—Nos. 660155 and 660156—and which are now the property of the Western Electric Co.

In view of this fact, it is urged that "there is no possible excuse for the proposed payment of such a huge sum for the exclusive rights to the Hammond patents."

With reference to the objections under (a), it is proposed to purchase, as you are well aware, the inventions of Mr. Hammond and his company only after a thorough demonstration of the system before a joint Army and Navy board, consisting of three officers from each service, to be appointed by the President. The proposal of Mr. Hammond and his company gives the United States an option to purchase the inventions, such option "to be exercised within 60 days from the conclusion of said demonstration." In the event of the passage of the appropriation, the Government is not bound to consummate the purchase, but has simply an option to do so, to be exercised after a thorough demonstration of the system before the joint board, provision being made in the appropriation for the expense of such demonstration "in a sum not to exceed $30,000." The character of the examination is not restricted, and may be made under such conditions as will satisfy the board that the system of control is not only mechanically operative but is useful under war conditions. I think the interests of the Government are fully safeguarded in this respect.

With regard to the objections under (b), these have been considered at a conference in this department, June 6, 1916, at which a representative from the Patent Office who is familiar with this branch of patents was present; and the department was advised by him that while some of the claims made in the many applications of Mr. Hammond for patents have been rejected in the examinations so far made as too broad, being anticipated by the Fiske and other patents, a very large majority of the claims have been allowed as the result of such examinations, although patents have not yet been issued, for the reason that it has not been deemed best to make the inventions public. It should be added that there are over 100 applications, embracing more than 2,000 claims, so that it would be impracticable, in the limited time available, to consider these many claims in detail. It should be observed, however, that it is contemplated to purchase the system as a whole, and that the purchase will only be consummated after the joint board is satisfied, upon a full demonstration, that the system as a whole is of such value to the Government for military and naval uses as to justify its purchase on the basis proposed. In other words, the Government is acquiring a complete system of radiodynamic control of torpedoes, etc., and the several applications for patents are specified simply so that the Government will acquire all the rights of Mr. Hammond and his company in the inventions. It appears that the Fiske patents now owned by the Western Electric Co. will expire in about 16 months, so that after that lapse of time there can be no claims presented against the United States for any infringement of the Fiske patent occurring after that date. In order that the Government may be fully protected with respect to any claims for infringement of these patents or any other prior inventions, if any, the matter has been taken up with the attorneys of Mr. Hammond, resulting in the agreement for the insertion in the proposed contract, incorporated in the said proposal of March 23, 1916, of the following paragraph:

"8. That the parties of the first part shall hold and save the United States and all officers and agents thereof harmless from and against all claims or demands of any nature or kind by prior inventors or patentees of any of the discoveries, inventions, improvements, devices, processes, and systems covered by this contract as the inventions of said John Hays Hammond, jr., for the purpose of controlling by radiodynamic energy the movement of water-borne carriers of high explosives: Provided, however, That the total amount of all such claims or demands paid or to be paid by the parties of the first part shall not exceed the total amount of $750,000 paid to the said parties of the first part under this contract: And provided further, That this paragraph shall not apply to articles, devices, mechanisms, etc., which are or may be for sale, on the market, and patented or otherwise, and not the invention of the said John Hays Hammond, jr., or owned by the parties of the first part, and which the United States uses or purchases in the equipping of any radiodynamic torpedo unit. This paragraph shall not, however, apply if the United States by its own act in allowing the forfeiture or abandonment of any application of John Hays Hammond, jr., shall thereby be the cause of the issuance of an adverse patent right which would not have been issued if the same had been thrown into interference with the said Hammond applications. This paragraph shall not apply to any unit built under this contract unless the mechanisms and processes of said unit shall first have been submitted to the parties of the first part to permit them to consider the question of infringement; and if apparent infringement be found, the parties of the first part shall have the option to substitute therefor mechanisms and processes constituting the invention of the said Hammond or other property of the parties of the first part to carry out the subject matter of this contract, provided such mechanisms and processes shall be, in the opinion of the United States, a suitable substitute therefor, giving equivalent results, and in which event such mechanisms and processes shall be and become the property of the United States. Should the parties of the first part be unable to substitute such mechanisms and processes as shall be, in the opinion of the United States, a suitable substitute, and within such reasonable time as shall be determined by the United States, the United States shall have the right to build such unit without regard to any infringement or apparent infringement, said parties of the first part being obligated as aforesaid to hold and save the United States and all officers and agents thereof harmless from and against all claims and demands of any nature or kind for any infringement of the rights of any other persons whatsoever."

A formal instrument has been executed for the purpose, under date of June 10, 1916, and it is inclosed herewith. It is the view of this department that the interests of the United States are sufficiently safeguarded in this matter.

Very respectfully,

WM. M. INGRAHAM,
Acting Secretary of War.

The proposal of John Hayes Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.), executed on the 23d day of March, 1916, for the sale to the United States of the inventions, improvements, devices, processes, and systems specified therein for the control by radiodynamic energy of the movement of water-borne carriers of high explosives, is hereby amended by inserting in the form of contract embodied therein the following paragraph to be No. 8:

"8. That the parties of the first part shall hold and save the United States and all officers and agents thereof harmless from and against all claims or demands of any nature or kind by prior inventors or patentees of any of the discoveries, inventions, improvements, devices, processes, and systems covered by this contract as the inventions of said John Hays Hammond, jr., for the purpose of controlling by radiodynamic energy the movement of water-borne carriers of high explosives: Provided however, That the total amount of all such claims or demands paid, or to be paid, by the parties of the first part shall not exceed the total amount of $750,000 paid to the said parties of the first part under this contract: And provided further, That this paragraph shall not apply to articles, devices, mechanisms, etc., which are or may be for sale, on the market and patented or otherwise, and not the invention of the said John Hays Hammond, jr., or owned by the parties of the first part and which the United States uses or purchases in the equipping of any radiodynamic-torpedo unit. This paragraph shall not, however, apply if the United States by its own act in allowing the forfeiture or abandonment of any application of John Hays Hammond, jr., shall thereby be the cause of the issuance of an adverse patent right which would not have been issued if the same had been thrown into interference with the said Hammond applications. This paragraph shall not apply to any unit built under this contract unless the mechanisms and processes of said unit shall first have been submitted to the parties of the first part to permit them to consider the question of infringement, and, if apparent infringement be found, the parties of the first part shall have the option to substitute therefor mechanisms and processes constituting the invention of the said Hammond or other property of the parties of the first part, to carry out the subject matter of this contract, provided such mechanisms and processes shall be in the opinion of the United States a suitable substitute therefor, giving equivalent results, and in which event such mechanisms and processes shall be and become the property of the United States. Should the parties of the first part be unable to substitute such mechanisms and processes as shall be in the opinion of the United States a suitable substitute and within such reasonable time as shall be determined by the United States, the United States shall have the right to build such unit without regard to any infringement, or apparent infringement, said parties of the first part being obligated as aforesaid to hold and save the United States and all officers and agents thereof harmless from and against all claims and demands of any nature or kind for any infringement of the rights of any other persons whatsoever."

In witness whereof the said John Hays Hammond, jr., and the said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.), have affixed their signatures hereto this 10th day of June, 1916; the name of said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.), being hereunto affixed by its assistant secretary thereunto duly authorized.

In the presence of—

JOHN HAYS HAMMOND, JR. [SEAL.]
RADIO ENGINEERING CO. OF NEW YORK (INC.). [SEAL.]
By LESLIE BUSWELL.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:

I, John B. Randolph, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, do hereby certify that John Hays Hammond, jr., and Leslie Buswell (the latter duly authorized as assistant secrtary of the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.), parties to the foregoing and annexed proposal bearing date on the 10th day of June, 1916, personally appeared before me in my district aforesaid, the said Hammond and the said Buswell being personally known to me to be the persons who executed the said proposal and there acknowledge the same as the act and deed of said Hammond and of said Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.).

Given under my hand and official seal this 10th day of June, 1916.

[SEAL.] JNO. B. RANDOLPH,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

My commission expires November 12, 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioner of Patents is authorized and directed, in the event of the entrance by the Government into a contract with the abovementioned parties for the purchase of such rights in all instances where it would grant patents to John Hays Hammond, jr., or to the Radio Engineering Co. upon request of the United States to issue said patents to the United States, and the Commissioner of Patents is further authorized and directed to keep applications for such patents in the secret archives of the Patent Office, not open to disclosure even in cases of interferences.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY for the committee: On page 8, in line 13, after the word "and," insert the following: "In the event of said contract being made."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that amendment is simply to make plain that the Commissioner of Patents is not to keep these matters in the secret archives unless this contract is entered into and these rights are secured. It was simply an omission in the original draft of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For procurement and installation of one radiodynamic torpedo unit, $417,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY for the committee: Page 8, in line 18, after the figures "$417,000," insert "Provided, That no part of said sum shall be so expended unless the United States shall first acquire, as heretofore provided, the rights of the said John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the provision as it now stands in the bill would authorize the expenditure of this $417,000 without regard to the acquirement of the rights of Mr. Hammond. This was an oversight in the original draft of the bill, and the amendment puts in a limitation preventing the expenditure of any of the money unless these rights are purchased as the result of an affirmative report by the joint board as provided above in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY for the committee: On page 8, after line 18, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Section 4834 of the Revised Statutes is amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4894. All applications for patents shall be completed and prepared for examination within one year after the filing of the application, and in default thereof, or upon failure of the applicant to prosecute the same within one year after any action therein, of which notice shall have been given to the applicant, they shall be regarded as abandoned by the parties thereto, unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Patents that such delay was unavoidable: Provided, however, That no application shall be regarded as abandoned which has become the property of the Government of the United States and with respect to which the head of any department of the Government shall have certified to the Commissioner of Patents, within a period of three years, that the invention disclosed therein is important to the armament or defense of the United States: Provided further, That within 90 days, and not less than 30 days, before the expiration of any such three-year period the Commissioner of Patents shall, in writing, notify the head of the department interested in any pending application for patent of the approaching expiration of the three-year period within which any application for patent shall have been pending.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the amendment. I will ask the gentleman, Is this exactly in the form in which the House passed the bill on this subject the other day?

Mr. SHERLEY. I was going to explain that this is exactly in accord with the rule which made it in order, but it is not in exact accord with the bill that was passed in the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar the other day, the difference being only in the last proviso, which requires that the Commissioner of Patents shall notify the department that the period within which it is to notify the commissioner for a continuation of the application is about to expire.

Mr. MANN. Supposing the commissioner does not notify the head of the department. Then what?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think that would change the situation, but it was suggested that the department interested in the matter might overlook the time, whereas the Commissioner of Patents would have an actual record and would have placed upon him the burden of notifying the proper parties.

Mr. MANN. This extends the application for three years, or does something for three years?

Mr. SHERLEY. This extends the application indefinitely, provided within three years a statement is made by the department that it is necessary in the interest of the national defense.

Mr. MANN. Supposing the Commissioner of Patents does not notify the department and the department does not do anything within the three years. The patent would not continue then?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the department does not notify the Commissioner of Patents in three years, why, then the patent right would be lost by failure to prosecute the application.

Mr. MANN. This really is just a request to the Commissioner of Patents?

Mr. SHERLEY. Practically. It is intended to prevent, if possible, the lapsing of the right by oversight.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that at all, though I would seriously question the advisability of making the life of a patent or the right of the Government depend upon whether the Commissioner of Patents happened to notify somebody.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think this does that.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is just to double the safety of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I may have misunderstood the reading of the amendment. Does this apply to patents generally, or only to patents in which the Government has an interest?

Mr. SHERLEY. It applies only in instances where the application has become the property of the Government of the United States, and with respect to it the head of any department of the Government shall have certified to the Commissioner of Patents within a period of three years that the invention disclosed therein is important to the armament or defense of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It applies only to such patents as the Government is interested in?

Mr. SHERLEY. Only to such patents as the Government owns and further suggests is important to the defense of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Hawaiian Islands, $3,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 25, strike out the sum $3,000 and insert in lieu thereof the sum of $5,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that is that the committee cut the maintenance item, thinking that it could properly be cut, but on later advices from Hawaii, it was believed that $3,000 would hardly suffice to properly maintain the fortifications there, and the increase is made of $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $13,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change "$13,000" to "$15,000," so as to correct the total.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the total will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For land defenses in the Hawaiian Islands, including the procurement and installation of searchlights and the acquisition of land and rights of way, $129,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 5, strike out the sum of $129,000 and insert in lieu thereof the sum of $169,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, after the bill was written up there came a supplemental estimate to the committee touching the land defenses in the Hawaiian Islands in which it appears that to carry out the work that the item contemplated it would require $40,000 more, and on consideration of the matter the committee considered this amendment necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Hawaiian Islands, $2,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$2,000" and insert "$2,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 13, strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,500."

Mr. SHERLEY. This is an increase of $500 in the maintenance item for the repair of searchlights, and so forth, in the Hawaiian Islands. It is similar to the amendment we adopted touching the fortifications.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $5,500.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the figures "5,500" may be changed to "6,000," to make the total correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE CHIEF OF ARTILLERY.

For construction of fire-control stations and accessories, including purchase of lands and rights of way, purchase and installation of necessary lines and means of electrical communication, including telephones, dial and other telegraphs, wiring and all special instruments, apparatus and materials, coast-signal apparatus, and salaries of electrical experts, engineers, and other necessary employees connected with the use of coast artillery; purchase, manufacture, and test of range finders and other instruments for fire control at the fortifications, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $100,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in line 8, page 11, in the subheading, which reads "under the chief of artillery," I move to amend by inserting the word "coast" before the word "artillery."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 8, after the word "of," insert the word "coast."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This section authorizes the purchase of matériel abroad when in the judgment of the Secretary of War it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make the purchase. I would like to inquire if anyone here knows what the reasons are for the War Department having collier No. 1 constructed in a Chinese shipyard?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am unable to advise the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I do not know who made the contract, whether it was the Secretary of War under this administration or under a former administration, but I must say that I think it will be referred to many times before the year is over. What object is there in excluding Chinese labor from America if the Government of the United States itself goes over to the Chinese shipyards to have the war vessels constructed over there? It seems odd. I simply speak of it, hoping that the War Department has a very good excuse for it, though I can not imagine one.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that if the fact is as the gentleman indicates there is some reason for it, but I have no personal knowledge respecting it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That expenditures for carrying out the provisions of this act shall not be made in such manner as to prevent the operation of the Government arsenals at their most economical rate of production, except when a special exigency requires the operation of a portion of an arsenal's equipment at a different rate.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAVENNER: Page 14, line 18, after the word "rate," strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant."

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the same amendment that was retained in the naval appropriation bill last week by a vote of 100 to 74. Five different committees of Congress have investigated the subject of the use of the stop watch and have considered legislation abolishing it, of one of which committee Senator BORAH was the chairman, all reporting bills favorably, and the matter has been before the House three different times in the way of amendments to the Army and Navy appropriation bills, and on each occasion the House inserted substantially this amendment in those bills.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the merits of this amendment except to refer to the letter of the Secretary of War recently written, and I just want to say that it will take a quorum in both the committee and the House to agree to this amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I personally have not favored the amendment that has been offered. I expressed my views when the naval bill was under consideration. The House at that time did not concur in the views that I then expressed, and voted down the amendment that was offered to strike down a provision in this exact language which was contained in the naval appropriation bill. While I have not changed my views upon the subject, I recognize that that vote was a vote taken when there was a very large attendance of the House, and that it probably expressed the views of the membership of the House. Gentlemen came to me during the consideration of this bill saying they desired to offer a similar amendment, and that they wanted to know whether this bill would be considered with a full or a light attendance. I stated that I had no desire to take advantage of anyone; that I could not tell how large attendance there would be, but that the proper place for such an amendment, if it was to be adopted, would be at the conclusion of the bill, and that if there was any disposition on the part of gentlemen to press it, or on the part of other gentlemen to oppose it, I should ask for a sufficient attendance to have the House express its judgment. I want in good faith to carry out that statement. I want to be fair to both the proponents and the opponents of the measure. There is probably not a quorum of the House in the city at this time. There is, however, a quorum of the Committee of the Whole. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] whether, if a quorum of the committee were obtained, he would desire to object to the consideration of the provision?

Mr. MANN. I would want a quorum of both the committee and the House to agree to this amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is before the committee. Of course I realize that if the committee adopts it, it will then be subject to a roll call, and in that event I should simply ask that the committee, after acting upon the amendment, should rise and report the bill with amendments, and would not then press it for passage in the House until there was a quorum present in the city. That seems to be the only thing we can do in justice to everyone concerned.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that those of us who are interested in this amendment have no desire to press it in the absence of a quorum. We would be willing to enter into some arrangement by which we could fix a time when the matter might be taken up, when there is a quorum in the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Would it be satisfactory to the gentlemen that a vote be had upon it in committee, with the understanding that if the amendment be agreed to—and of course if it is not agreed to then the matter will not come before the House—the committee shall rise and report the bill, and that then we will not ask for the passage of the bill until there is a full attendance of the House?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to be entirely reasonable. Of course the gentleman could not ask for the passage of the bill if we demanded a roll call.

Mr. SHERLEY. Frankly, we could not pass it without a quorum; but I want to arrive at some understanding that would be known on all sides. I am in a position in which I am particularly desirous of treating everyone with the utmost fairness touching this particular amendment. Having myself opposed it, and being in charge of the bill, I do not want in any way to take advantage of the light attendance to prevent the House passing its free judgment upon the matter.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, permit me to make this suggestion: Suppose we enter into a unanimous-consent agreement, by which when this bill is reported to the House a motion to recommit will be entertained incorporating this provision, that motion to be voted on when we have a quorum. We could thus have a roll call on the motion to incorporate this provision.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the very much easier way would be to let the matter be acted upon in the committee. Then the amendment, if agreed to, would come up on the vote in the House as to whether we concur in that particular amendment or not. That would save the difficulty.

Mr. MANN. Well, we are in this situation: Of course, practically speaking, no one can move on a thing of this sort that requires action in the House except by unanimous consent. We had an agreement between the two sides of the House as to last week practically to the effect that there would be no roll call in the House on committee. That agreement did not extend over this week, though I was perfectly willing to have it do so. I stated at the outset that if the fortification bill came up and this amendment was offered, as I understand it was to be, that I should ask for a quorum. I notice on the first roll call to-day that there were quite a number more of Democratic Members present than there were of Republican Members. While I told the Republican Members who went to Chicago, as most of them did, that there was no agreement in reference to this week, still I said I did not think there would be very much contested business transacted this week, and unless I sent for them they were not required to come back this week. Perhaps most of the Members of the House who went away will not be back next Monday.

I suppose if a matter of this sort was put off until Tuesday—and it is wholly within the power of the gentleman from Kentucky to say when, it does not require any unanimous-consent agreement, an understanding may be all right—that that would be sufficient. All he has to do is not to move the previous question and he can call up the bill when he pleases.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the simplest way would be for me to suggest now that the committee rise without recommendation, and then it would be in order to move on next Tuesday for the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. MANN. On this bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. On this bill, and this amendment will be pending——

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. On this item which we will have before us.

Mr. MANN. I think that will be the simplest procedure.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. KEATING. That is all right. The only thing we desired was to get an expression of opinion from the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14303, the fortifications bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 14, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for this our national ensigns natal day. Born a thing of beauty; the embodiment of all that is dearest to the American heart; expressed in the Declaration of Independence, reiterated in the Constitution of the United States. The emblem of liberty and freedom through law and order. It seeks no conquest, but would protect the sacred rights of its people on land and on sea. We love it for its past and for its future promises, and we pray that it may float on in the triumph of peace, justice, truth, righteousness, and good will, now and evermore. In the spirit of Him who taught us fatherhood, brotherhood. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution recently adopted by the Assembly of Louisiana protesting against the passage of the bill (S. 5242) to amend the interstate commerce act, introduced by the junior Senator from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution recently adopted by the Louisiana Legislature. Is there objection?

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is Flag Day, and I move as a mark of respect and on account of loyalty to the flag that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEBB. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 18.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. You can not make a point of no quorum on that vote.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to ask whether the gentleman from Illinois objected to my request or waives it?

The SPEAKER. There was not any disposition made of that request. What was it the gentleman from Illinois said about the motion?

Mr. MANN. You can not make a point of no quorum on that vote.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's parliamentary inquiry will have to be taken up when there has been a quorum developed. The gentleman from North Carolina demands the yeas and nays on the question of adjournment. Those in favor of the motion to adjourn will rise and stand until they are counted. (After counting.) Eighteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side. I thought there were 90 in all. Eighteen would be one-fifth of those present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the other side. Those opposed to this vote being taken by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. (After a pause.) Nobody seems to have risen. Eighteen are sufficient, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question is on adjournment. Those in favor of adjournment will answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 62, answered "present" 6, not voting 275, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 15, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we would hallow Thy name in thought, word, and deed; hence we wait upon Thee for the quickening of that spark which makes us Thine and all the world akin and which inspires to great thoughts, clean living, and generous deeds. Speak to us, that we may go forward in faith and confidence with the tasks of the hour. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposal of the Louisiana bridge bill I may have 20 minutes to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that after the disposition of the Louisiana bridge bill he may be permitted to proceed for not exceeding 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the Louisiana bridge bill should not be disposed of until next week? I think the gentleman had better wait, and I think there will be no doubt that he can get in later.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a statement that I made before the Committee on the Judiciary on the subject of woman suffrage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, as a part of his remarks, a statement he made before the Committee on the Judiciary on the subject of woman suffrage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech of ex-Gov. Glynn, temporary chairman of the Democratic convention at St. Louis. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow we take up unobjected bills on the Private Calendar and begin where we left off on the last day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that to-morrow after the reading of the Journal and clearing up of business on the Speaker's table the Private Calendar shall be taken up on such bills as are unobjected to, and that we begin where we left off. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT BATON ROUGE.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3722, to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3722. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved July 17, 1914, to be built across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La., is hereby extended three years and six years, respectively, from date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the words "three" and "six," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two" and "five."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "three" and "six," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the words "two" and "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H. R. 9235, was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting several articles on the seamen's law and its operation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the seamen's law for safety at sea. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Is it some remarks of the gentleman himself or some articles that he wishes to insert?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. They are some articles from La Follette's Magazine. One is by Mrs. Kelley, one other by Victor Olander, of Chicago, and another by Representative HARDY.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting some resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of Louisiana protesting against the passage of the Sheppard bill amending the interstate-commerce act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing resolutions by the General Assembly of Louisiana. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the President's speech delivered on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech of the President of the United States delivered yesterday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the Evening Star, of this city, of June 13, entitled "The bench and politics"; also an editorial of the Washington Times of the same date entitled "Wilson, the man of words, and Hughes, the man of deeds."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing an editorial from the Evening Star on "The bench and politics," and an editorial from the Times on "Wilson, the man of words, and Hughes, the man of deeds."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the gentleman from Missouri should have the first opportunity?

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to ask unanimous consent to follow the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri has been making an effort to get in, and I did not know but that he should have the first chance.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes, and that immediately following the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for 20 minutes, and that immediately following the gentleman from Mississippi may have 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Make it one at a time, for we may want to interlard.

The SPEAKER. Which one wants to go ahead first?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Neither one of them has yet obtained consent to go ahead.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not ask that. The Chair asked which one wanted to go ahead first.

Mr. BORLAND. My request was made first.

Mr. QUIN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for not exceeding 20 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman what he intends to talk about.

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to discuss a very important question—the Republican platform.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Does not the gentleman think he is asking a good deal by unanimous consent, in asking to discuss the Republican platform, when a moment ago a gentleman on that side objected to my inserting some editorials in the RECORD, although unanimous consent had just been given to two gentlemen on that side to insert similar articles?

Mr. BORLAND. I can only say to the gentleman from Washington that the objection did not come from me. If it had been the gentleman's own remarks, I know there would have been no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What I wanted to find out was whether you on that side intend to use the RECORD entirely for Democratic literature and not to permit the Republicans to put in any?

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman from Washington has gotten some things into the RECORD within my recollection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not get much in by unanimous consent, however.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Does he not think there is a great deal of difference between the keynote speech at St. Louis or the President's address on Flag Day and a couple of partisan editorials in local papers?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am laboring under an impression that the keynote speech at St. Louis was somewhat partisan.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It was partisan, of course; but it was a great event. On your side you had already put into the RECORD the keynote speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] at the Republican convention.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Washington will not object. This is Democratic week, the last week that will be Democratic week for several years. We ought to give them a chance for their white alley. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I wanted to adjourn in honor of that event, as you did yesterday in honor of Flag Day.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As far as I can recall, in all the time I have been a Member of this House I have never objected to a request for unanimous consent so far as I know; but I just wanted to call attention to the attitude of that side of the House. After obtaining unanimous consent to print these two partisan articles, when I offer one from this side there is objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman does not distinguish between an editorial and a speech desired to be made by a Member of this House. He seems to be unable to comprehend the difference.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, well, the gentleman sat there and allowed two articles to go in from that side of the House, not the remarks of gentlemen, but newspaper articles, and then he immediately rose and objected to my request to print two newspaper articles. Now, I just simply want to know whether the gentleman is objecting upon partisan grounds or whether he is trying to purge the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am trying to prevent the publication in the RECORD of editorials from various newspapers, from their standpoints, because to do so would take up the entire RECORD and make it useless.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why did not the gentleman object yesterday morning to the article that was inserted then?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman was on that side of the House, and he had a right to object, and I exercised my right to object this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Reserving the right to object, I should like to couple with it the request that after——

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not attempt to couple anything with the request.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri—I do not object to his speaking—whether his address will be as severe an attack upon the Republican Party as was the publication by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] of Gov. Hughes's message on the income tax to the Legislature of New York? If it is no more severe than that attack was, I should not object to the gentleman speaking for a long time.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the gentleman that the message was strong enough to induce the Republican Legislature of New York not to ratify the income-tax constitutional amendment; but one year later, when the Democrats came in, they did ratify the constitutional amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All the advice of Gov. Hughes to the New York Legislature seems to have been followed completely by the Democratic Party in the formation of an income-tax law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] one further question. I want to ask him if when he is on the floor he will explain what confidence he thinks the American people will have in the Democratic platform that is going to be adopted, in view of the way the Democratic Party have kept the one they adopted four years ago?

Mr. BORLAND. I know they have no confidence in the Republican platform.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes immediately following the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will postpone that request until the gentleman from Missouri has completed his remarks. I do not think there will be any objection to it then.

Mr. QUIN. I have not bothered this Congress during the whole time that we have had this gentleman's agreement. I have not opened my mouth.

Mr. MANN. That is a good deal to be thankful for, I know. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MANN. When the request comes at the proper time I do not think there will be any objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects for the present.

Mr. BENNET rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has concluded his remarks I may address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman make his request at that time.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman from Illinois objects. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request, to be made later.

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the Republican convention in Chicago was not in an heroic mood. If it had been, it would have nominated the man who had challenged it to that heroic act, instead of nominating, as it did, the cold-storage twins—Hughes and Fairbanks. It is evident also that it was not in an heroic mood when it made the Republican platform of 1916. Of course I realize it were more or less scared into that platform by the menacing figure of the Rough Rider; but it abandoned without mercy those thousands of Republicans who voted for Henry Ford, and it abandoned also the scores of Republican Congressmen on the floor of this House who have voted and spoken against preparedness. There is one peculiar thing about the Republican platform of 1916. It is remarkable for the things that it does not say. It is a platform of silence. There is very little "pointing with pride"; very little about the previous record of the party. The keynote of the Republican platform is "Forget 1912!"

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I regret that I have not the time, as it is my purpose to condense my remarks within the time allotted. But, Mr. Speaker, if the American people, refusing to accept this cloak of silence over the previous record and performance of the Republican Party, insists upon examining the Republican platform of 1912, they will find a very remarkable series of eliminations. The Republican platform of 1912 was made after that party had been in power for 16 years, and yet in that platform they promised nearly a score of acts of remedial legislation that they had not been able to perform in the 16 years of power which preceded. This was done to please the Progressives, whose confidence they had lost by refusing the opportunity to legislate on necessary reforms. Why, with the power in their hands, they had not carried out these promises before they did not stop to explain. It is perfectly remarkable that all of those promises of the platform of 1912 have disappeared from the platform of 1916. Mark them.

They promised a revision of the antitrust laws supplementing the Sherman Antitrust Act. That has disappeared from the platform of 1916, because the Democrats have fully performed the task.

They promised in the platform of 1912 a Federal trade commission. The platform of 1916 is silent on that, because the Democrats have already attended to the work.

They promised a tariff commission, but the Democrats are preparing to give the American people a tariff commission.

They promised a reform in the banking and currency laws, but this has been successfully accomplished by the Democrats.

They promised a rural-credits bill, but the Democrats are actually giving such a bill to the farmers.

They promised constructive legislation upon the subject of conservation, to open up the great undeveloped resources of the West, but the Democratic Party took that job off their hands.

They promised a parcel post, but the Democratic measure is already in operation.

They promised flood protection to the Mississippi Valley, but the people found that they could get flood protection from the Democratic Party.

They promised a law extending the time for the payment of the reclamation projects, and this has already been taken care of by the present administration.

They promised the opening of Alaska, but the Democrats have already done that.

They promised citizenship to the people of Porto Rico, but the people of that island have received consideration first from the Democratic Party.

They promised safety at sea, but the Democratic Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has thoroughly legislated upon that subject.

Not a word of those promises appear in the 1916 platform, except the proposition of rural credits, and on that they say:

> We favor an effective system of rural credits, as opposed to the ineffective law proposed by the Democratic administration.

I wonder how that consoles our friends the Republican Congressmen who voted for that law on the floor of this House? All of the other promises they have made to the American people after 16 years of unbroken power, they have eliminated from the present platform. That is a remarkable compliment from a strange source to the efficacy of three years of Democratic rule. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They then regarded these great remedial measures as vital to the interests of the American people. Now they admit that those promises have been so fully performed and the work so well and thoroughly done that the subject is even beyond possibility of partisan criticism in their platform of 1916.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I regret that I can not, as I am going to confine myself to the time allotted.

According to their platform, there are but two issues left to the Republicans—protective tariff and preparedness.

What is the matter with the income tax, which is demonstrating so handsomely its facility for raising revenue? Do they not believe in an income tax, or do they not dare mention it after having nominated Judge Hughes as a candidate for President?

While the Republican platform is brief and is full of gaps and silences, it is long enough to betray the real sources of its inspiration. It is indelibly branded with the mark of the "special interests." Every plank in it spells "Big business" and "Special interests" in large type. They promise protection to the manufacturer, but they renew the pledge to keep the door wide open for free trade in labor. The manufacturer must be taken care of against any possible competition from foreign sources after the war, but for the "right of asylum," as they call it, or the power to import cheap foreign labor must neither "be surrendered nor restricted."

What has become of their friendship for rivers and harbors which they proclaimed so loudly in their platform of 1912? The platform of 1916 has eliminated it. The special interests say there must be no river and harbor improvements, and, therefore, the Republican platform says there must be no river and harbor improvements. They were loud in their demands for preparedness in every form, but they are silent on the subject of the Government manufacture of munitions. They make no promises that they will take the profits out of war.

They even condemn by plain insinuations a plan for the manufacturing of munitions in Government arsenals and the plan to make armor plate in competition with the three great armor-plate factories of the State of Pennsylvania. Conservation used to be given a prominent place in Republican platforms, but now they dismiss conservation with three lines and say nothing about curbing the rapacity of the Water Power Trust of the West. The special interests are against the income tax, and, therefore, the Republican platform "pussyfoots" about it.

In spite of the fact that the American merchant marine died under the Republican régime and in long years of Republican rule the American flag disappeared from the ocean, they have no promises to make for restoring this fundamental condition of foreign trade and economic independence except by a pledge of subsidies to the Shipping Trust, a proposition which has been defeated repeatedly on the floor of this House by the aid of Republican votes. They demand the retention of the Philippines because the "special interests" demand the retention of the Philippines—the Sugar Trust, the Tobacco Trust, the Cordage Trust, and the Wall Street bankers who hold the Philippine bonds.

We can pass over their querulous criticism of the foreign policy of the Democratic administration. They offer nothing better, and they will be at some loss to explain why these diplomatic victories of the Democratic administration have been so successful for American peace and American rights and have been so unpopular with some of the Governments abroad. Do they dare affirm that there is no way of asserting American rights except by war?

But one of the strangest things about this platform is the plank in reference to Mexico. That is so worded that anybody on any side of the Mexican question can make a speech upon it with perfect safety. The man who believes we ought to have recognized Huerta can make a speech on that platform. The man who believes we ought not to have had anything to do with Huerta can make a speech on that platform. The man who believes we never should have intervened can make a speech on that platform. The man who believes in the Carranza government can make a speech upon that platform. The man who believes we ought now to intervene can make a speech on that platform. The man who believes we ought to withdraw from Mexico can make a speech on that platform; and yet they do not say what they would have done toward giving the Mexican people a chance to work out their own destiny other than has been done, or that the result could have been any different.

They call loudly for cultivating the friendship of the South American countries. Who, pray, lost the friendship of those countries. Happily, we are winning back their friendship, and they are now cooperating with the Wilson administration.

Their so-called Americanism is really a mask to cover the bold attempt of great corporations to get control of the Federal Government. It is the "special interests" under a new mask.

What is this great "Republican platform"? There is not a word in it from start to finish that promises any remedial legislation for the American people. Every promise of the remedial legislation has been eliminated at the demand of the "special interests," whose support they hope to have in this campaign. Think of their abandoning rivers and harbors when platform after platform had committed the Republicans to it! Think of their being silent upon the great question of the manufacture of munitions in Government factories, when the whole country is demanding that the profits be taken out of war! Think of their slighting conservation and having nothing to say about the curbing of the Water Power Trust of the West! Think of their promising to restore the protective tariff, but not daring to refer to the income tax!

But stranger still, gentlemen, think of their refusing to mention a score, nearly, of promises which they made in 1912, which they now admit by their silence are no longer in issue before the American people. Think of their refusing to mention the question of currency reform with which they agitated this country four years ago, a direct confession that currency reform has been so thoroughly and successfully accomplished by the Democratic administration that panics and the fear of panics have disappeared. There is not a calamity howl from one end to the other of that Republican platform, in spite of the speeches that have been made so frequently here on the other side of the House, notably by our friend from Washington, saying that the country was on the verge of bankruptcy. All calamity howl disappeared when the Republicans met in conference, thereby proclaiming the success of the Democratic Party in meeting the conditions that confronted it.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. It will have to be very brief, because I have heretofore refused to yield.

Mr. COX. Is it not a fact that the Republican platform fails to make any declaration in favor of the old soldiers' pensions?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; now that the gentleman mentions that, there is not a word about the old soldiers. It is the greatest process of forgetting 1912 that has ever been pulled off in a national convention.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Does it say anything about being a candidate for only one term?

Mr. BORLAND. No; there is no necessity for saying that. There is no necessity for pledging any term to a candidate nominated on that platform.

When you come to compare that platform with the progressive measures that have been enacted since 1912, or to compare it with the Progressive platform of 1912, you will readily see that the "old guard" is in the saddle and the Progressives have been tricked. If by any disaster in this country the "old guard" could be successful, our Progressive friends will be precisely in the same situation as they were when the Progressives all over this country were voting against this kind of a "special-interest-made" platform prior to 1912. Can the Progressives stand for it? Or will they not prefer a record of Progressive achievement under the Wilson administration? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

FEDERAL JUDGES AS CANDIDATES FOR ELECTIVE OFFICES.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not take the floor for the purpose of referring to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. He always takes himself too seriously. I have no doubt that as soon as he read the Republican platform he came to the conclusion that he was the one and probably the only person in the Nation who could properly show its defects; and ever since the platform was published he has been making an effort to get the opportunity before the House to do so. I hope he feels relieved. No one on my side of the House feels offended by what he says; no one takes it seriously.

There have, however, been several references in the newspapers in the last few days particularly as to what certain distinguished Senators of the United States thought, and there has been a resolution introduced in Congress designed to prevent the nomination of any Federal judge to an elective office. There have been great assaults upon the Republican Party and its candidate for President because when he was nominated he was an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am glad to see that the President, apparently exercising a greater degree of wisdom than many of his followers, has decided that this shall not be an issue in the campaign. It is well to make that statement early, when it would appear to be a generous statement. The fact is there is nothing that we would welcome more than that kind of an issue, particularly in view of past events.

In 1904 there was a gentleman actively himself a candidate, openly and avowedly a candidate, for nomination by the Democratic convention. He was then the chief judge of the court of appeals of the great State of New York, the highest judicial position in that State, and, I dare say, outside of the Supreme Court of the United States, the most important judicial position in the country. He was nominated on July 9, 1904. It might be said in passing that another judge, a Federal judge, a judge very high in standing, by the way, whom no one will criticize, Judge Gray, of Delaware, also was voted for in the Democratic convention at the time Alton B. Parker was nominated for President. Mr. Parker did not wait before he commenced actively his efforts to influence the Democratic convention. He had not resigned his office as judge when he wired to the Democratic convention instructing them in reference to the platform which they had adopted and directing that they should do what he wanted done. He was still chief justice of the court of appeals of New York. He had not yet resigned.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to my enthusiastic friend, who always falls into a trap of some kind when he can.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman from Illinois distinguish between a man holding an elective office for a stated time to which the people have chosen him and a man who holds a Federal judgeship for life?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I should say, if anything, it was a grosser impropriety, although I do not think it an impropriety, for a man elected as a judge to seek another elective position than it is for a man appointed for life. [Applause on the Republican side.] We did not say anything about this during the campaign in 1904. Parker did not resign at once.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had better not mix in this right now.

Mr. LINTHICUM. You mentioned the fact of Judge Parker being nominated. You did not tell us whether or not he was elected. What happened?

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose the gentleman knows enough to know that. But I would advise him to read history as far back as that time. He is old enough to seek out information as far back as 1904. No doubt his ignorance is comparable with the average ignorance on the Democratic side. [Laughter.]

Mr. Parker did not resign at once. On the contrary, he convened the Court of Appeals in New York in a private special session for the purpose of determining a number of cases. He did not resign until August. Immediately after the special court, on August 5, he sent in his resignation.

I do not think I would take the trouble to refer to the matter if I had not read in the newspaper the other day an entertaining and instructive statement by the distinguished Speaker of this House over his signature, in which he made some comments upon this subject.

Our distinguished Speaker was, I believe, chairman of the Democratic convention in 1904, and the honor of notifying Alton B. Parker of his nomination fell to him. Evidently our distinguished Speaker at that time did not think it was violating the proprieties for a judge on the bench to be nominated for the office of President, for this is what he said:

> Your long and conspicuous career as a jurist in one of the highest courts in the world, the period which you have spent in expounding the Constitution and statutes causes your countrymen to believe that into that more exalted position to which they are about to call you, you will carry with you that profound respect for the Constitution and the law which, with you, has become a confirmed mental habit and upon which depends the perpetuity of our system of government—the best ever devised by the wit of man.

[Applause.]

In 1904 that was a brilliant statement. It is equally brilliant to-day. [Applause.] It contained the elements of truth in every particular, with the exception of one. That was in the statement that the man was to be elected. That was a slight error of fact, I will say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], if he is not aware of it. [Laughter.] But it stated a proper principle that the man who had served well, as Judge Parker had served well, as the highest judicial officer of the great State of New York, might be expected to bring into the office of President a profound knowledge and respect for constitutional principles and constitutional liberty. It is true now, as it was then.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Have you not got enough yet? [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. No.

Mr. MANN. Then go ahead.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I merely wanted to prophesy of your judge what happened to our judge. I wanted you to see into the future sufficiently to know what happens to judges who are nominated for the Presidency. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Well, that is too cheap to reply to. We find this distinction: When Justice Hughes was notified of his nomination for President he immediately resigned. He did not send a notice of acceptance in any way until he had resigned the office of judge. He had not organized a propaganda to secure his nomination. Our distinguished Democratic candidate had organized a propaganda to secure his nomination while he was a judge on the bench, and he did not resign for a considerable period after his nomination.

Now, if any of you gentlemen want to carry this issue into the campaign, proceed with it. We are quite willing, quite willing. That is the only thing you have said yet against our candidate. We are quite willing to meet that or any other issue in the campaign. [Applause on the Republican side.]

THE RAILWAY MAIL PROBLEM.

Mr. QUIN rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is recognized.

Mr. QUIN. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for not to exceed 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have enjoyed the speeches of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Missouri, my colleague [Mr. BORLAND], but I can not see what good it is going to do the country for a Congressman on this floor to talk about what the Republican platform has in it, nor for anybody to eulogize the Republican nominee. I propose to discuss a question that I believe this Congress ought to be vitally interested in and give its moral support to our Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in order to back up the gentleman from Tennessee, Judge MOON, and his colaborers on that committee and the wise provisions ingrafted into the postal legislation known as the Moon bill. I shall present the people's side of this living, vital, breathing question.

The Post Office Department is asking for the substitution of the space basis in railroads carrying the mails in lieu of the weight basis at a rate of pay about one-half cent per car-mile under the car-mile revenue which the railroads now obtain as a whole from their passenger business, and that a penalty of $5,000 shall be imposed against any railroad company that may refuse to carry the mails.

First. Is that fair and just, both to the railroads and the people of the United States?

Mr. Speaker, three times that provision for the railroads to transport the mails on the space basis has passed this branch of Congress and twice failed in the Senate, and the third time it has been knocked out by the Senate committee.

Second. Which is right in its conclusions on this vital matter, the House of Representatives or the United States Senate?

Third. Does this Government owe a higher duty to the transportation companies of this country than it does to the people who compose the Government?

The railroad companies have special privileges granted to them under the Constitution. They are empowered to exercise the right of eminent domain. They are public carriers and enjoy all of the charter rights and franchises that the Constitution can grant.

Fourth. Does the moral and legal obligation rest upon these public-service corporations to transport at a reasonable and fair price the United States mails?

Fifth. Can these railroads be forced to so carry the mails under the Constitution, in the absence of specific legislation on the subject?

Sixth. Should these public-service corporations, with all of the special privileges granted to them by the Government, be permitted to remain in a legal attitude where they could refuse to carry the mails at a fair price and ignore and inconvenience the people of this great country?

Gentlemen, before answering these questions, I shall make a few pertinent observations and show the great favors which Congress has granted to many of the railroad companies of this Republic.

Our Government has always been lenient and generous to the railroads. In the early days—July, 1832—Congress passed an act to release from duty all iron imported into the United States, which was to enter into railroad construction. This law remained in effect until January 1843, which amounted in actual bounty to the sum of $5,989,992. It would not have been repealed then, but the Pennsylvania iron industry exercised a greater power than railroads in Congress, and had a protective tariff of $25 per ton put on iron.

Up to 1850 Congress had granted right of way, material rights, and terminal grounds to railroads through the public lands.

In 1850 the first grant of large bodies of land was granted to a railroad company.

I shall give in detail each and all of these land grants which in the course of time became a shameful waste of the public domain, and a source of public profligacy, which resulted in charges of corruption.

Very few people of the present generation have any conception of the enormity of that land-grant epoch.

1. On September 20, 1850, Congress granted the Illinois Central Railroad Co. every other section of land for 6 miles back on both sides of the railroad track in the State of Illinois, comprising 2,595,133 acres of land.

2. On September 20, 1850, the same donation was given to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Co., every other section of land for 6 miles on both sides of the track, making 12 miles wide, through the State of Mississippi and through the State of Alabama, making a total of 1,156,658.73.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAGSDALE). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. I am very much interested in the gentleman's discussion, but will the gentleman state where this controversy is now pending, and what is the status of the bill represented as the one that the gentleman is discussing?

Mr. QUIN. I am discussing the railway-space provision, as provided in the Moon bill, and the justification for the penalty of $5,000 for a railroad refusing to carry the mail; and before getting to that germane part of the discussion I am giving you in detail the advantages and favors and special privileges that the American Congress has granted to the railways of this Republic.

Mr. SLOAN. But this bill is not before this House at this time.

Mr. QUIN. In my discussion I propose to show where it is, and what has happened to the bill that this House has passed, and what the House should do toward aiding our committee and the conferees in that matter.

Mr. SLOAN. What I was interested in very much was the location of that controversy and the location of the bill. Where is it?

Mr. QUIN. At the present time it is in the newspapers of this country. The great trouble is that the measure that this House passed three times gets over to the other end of this Capitol and goes to sleep, and I am proposing to wake it up.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it before the other body now or before a committee of conference?

Mr. QUIN. The bill is before the other body, and will be before the committee of conference in a short while, I hope.

My friends, if you will allow me to proceed, I will give you something to take home with you.

The total of all these donations of the public lands to railroad corporations mentioned above is the staggering figure of approximately 158,400,000 acres; the first was made in 1850, and the last in 1871, a very short time which Congress used to strip the people of the vast public domain.

Can you realize what a great empire 158,400,000 acres of land is? It is a larger area, if all these acres were placed together, than the entire German Empire, where 70,000,000 of people lived and prospered. It is as large a territory as the States of Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Tennessee combined. Can you believe that Congress in the short period of 21 years gave that much of the public lands to a few fellows with railroad charters?

I shall show you to a mathematical certainty that my statement is correct. I gave you the number of acres granted to each railroad, and the grand total is 158,400,000 acres to all of them combined.

Now, the total area of the State of Alabama is 33,278,720 acres, the total area of the State of Georgia is 37,929,600 acres, the total area of the State of Louisiana is 31,443,840 acres, the total area of the State of Mississippi is 29,993,600 acres, the total area of the State of Tennessee is 26,894,480 acres; add this together and you have 159,550,240 acres as the total area of these five Southern States combined, which in area is about the same as the American Congress gave to these men with railroad charters.

All of these great principalities and empires of land and all that went with it, which belonged to the people, were given to railroad companies.

Gentlemen, that is not all that Congress did for them. There was a group of railroads termed the Pacific railways, all of which had immense grants of land given to them by Congress. On July 2, 1864, Congress actually voted and authorized and issued subsidy bonds to each of the Pacific railways, as follows:

Union Pacific Railroad Co	$27,236,512
Kansas Pacific Railroad Co	6,303,000
Central Branch, Union Pacific Railroad Co	1,600,000
Sioux City & Pacific Railroad Co	1,628,320
Central Pacific Railroad Co	25,885,120
Western Pacific Railroad Co	1,970,560
Total	64,623,512

All of the above was on a second mortgage. The records of Congress show that the schemers, as organizers of the roads, also organized themselves into construction companies which robbed and gutted the bondholders in the price of construction material and everything that went to build the railroads. It was in the construction of the Pacific railways that the famous Credit Mobilier played such an important part. It ought to be called the rascality association.

In 1867 these corporations owed the Government $144,945,833 and no funds to pay a dollar of the bonds, nor the interest, all of which was long past due. The Government finally got part of its pay by holding back half of the price for carrying the mails. The interest is still unpaid by the Kansas Pacific Railroad Co., eastern division. The Sioux City & Pacific Railroad Co. defaulted on the bonds and interest, and by order of court that road was sold to the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Co. In April, 1916, the Treasury Department shows that the Central Branch, Union Pacific Railroad Co., still owes the Government $3,604,203.23 on account of the subsidy bonds.

Most of these land-grant railroads were required by the charter which Congress granted to transport the mails, troops, and equipment for the United States Government free of charge. None of them did it; and, strange to say, won against the Government when it was tested in the courts. The Illinois Central Railroad Co. was the first to refuse, and won in the contest against the Government. The outrageous manner in which the Pacific railways imposed on the people became a public scandal. In 1886 and 1887 the United States Senate passed bills to prevent Members of Congress from acting as attorney or employee of any land-grant railroads. All kinds of charges of loose conduct and corruption were made in connection with these railroads and some Members of Congress acting in capacity as attorney for them.

The activity of the grangers movement began about 1869, and it is due to that organization of farmers that Congress halted in its bold acts of granting the public lands to railroad corporations. The last land grant to a railroad was made in 1871. These organized farmers locked the stable door after nearly all the horses had been stolen. What a pity they did not start earlier.

Mr. Speaker, Congress did something else for the railroads. In the following years it voted subsidies over and above the regular price for carrying the mails by railroads, and these subsidies were paid under the euphonious name of "special facility appropriations." I give the exact amount for each year, so no one can be mistaken:

	Expenditures by fiscal years.
1879	$23,887.43
1880	49,313.64
1881	125,984.50

1890	293,744.26
1891	291,565.73
1892	193,065.94
1893	192,318.60
1894	151,540.71

1906	117,856.42
1907	54,052.12
1908	3,578.89
Total	5,164,247.86

Public sentiment revolted against this and Congress put a quietus on this grab which the railroads were clamoring for so actively. Permit me to say that the Government pays the land-grant railroads 20 per cent less for carrying the mails than other railroads receive.

Now, is there a man on this floor who fails to see that the United States Government has been exceedingly generous to railroads? If there be one here, rise up now and let us see you.

Gentlemen, assuming that these corporations should serve the Government at the same price for similar service as private parties, I will answer the first question of my argument.

The space basis and the pay therefor agreed upon by the Post Office Department and the House of Representatives in the Moon bill is fair and just both to the people and the railroads. Every sensible man knows it cost the railroads more to handle the passenger business for the same space and mileage than it does to haul the mails. Every reasonable person will agree that the railroads ought to serve the Government, their creator and benefactor, at a price as reasonable as they get from the express companies or big mail-order houses.

Listen. If the total mail carried throughout the country on the railroads were carried on the same basis, as to revenue, as the railroads receive for hauling express matter, unit per unit, they would receive $11,000,000 less than they now receive, for carrying the same weight, under the weight basis as mail. The fact is, it costs the railroads more for express than it does mail, and still express companies get a cheaper rate than does Uncle Sam.

The amount the Government paid the railroads for mail transportation and car service for the fiscal year 1915 was $59,407,111.74, and if this mail had been express, under the contract the railroads have with the express companies, the amount would have been $47,888,654.07, which would be over $11,000,000 less if paid for on the express basis than the amount paid on the mail basis.

The Post Office Department has established beyond the shadow of a doubt that the railroads have given an express rate to big mail-order houses between the large centers of production and the distributing points throughout the country much lower than the Government pays for the mails between the same points in the same trains. No railroad official nor anyone else can truthfully deny this statement of concrete facts. I have demonstrated to you that the railroads are charging the Government—the people—a higher rate than they charge private parties. The space basis provision of the Moon bill, which the House passed, in a measure eliminates the unfairness of the railroads to the Government in carrying the mails.

In answer to question 2, I affirm that the House is correct and right in its judgment in passing the Moon bill, placing the railroad mails on a space basis. The merits of the space basis as against the weight basis, and the ampleness of the rates prescribed in the bill passed by the House and rejected by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, are set forth with great positiveness and detail in the report of the joint commission of Congress known as the Bourne Commission. This report was signed by Senators Bourne, BANKHEAD, and WEEKS and Representatives LLOYD, TUTTLE, and Richardson. In analyzing the Bourne Commission report in connection with the bill passed by the House of Representatives at this session of Congress fixing the space basis and the rates of pay it should be borne in mind that the bill is the plan of railway mail pay advocated by the Bourne Commission and proposed by Postmaster General Burleson and his assistants, and is essentially the bill passed by the House at the previous session of Congress and favorably reported by the House and Senate conferees, composed of Senators BANKHEAD and SWANSON and Representatives MOON, FINLEY, and MADDEN.

On this high authority, after careful and exhaustive investigation, the lower branch of Congress passed the bill as an honest and just measure for the people and the railroads. The Senate committee saw proper to kill it and grant in lieu thereof virtually every demand made by the railroads.

In answer to the third question, I submit that the Government owes no higher obligation to the railroads than it owes to the people. Congress is duty bound to deal in the same fair manner, both to the railroads and the people. Congress can not afford to knowingly stultify itself by giving the railroads an unfair advantage over the people.

The present weight method of carrying the mails, if continued, will increase the amount $5,000,000 the first year, and a few millions additional each year thereafter, until in a few years the increase would amount to $25,000,000 more each year than the railroads receive now, and the parcel-post system would be greatly hampered and virtually destroyed. The people of this country pay the taxes, and their rights must be protected.

In answer to the fourth question, I say the obligation, both legal and moral, rests upon the railroads to transport the mails, soldiers, and all supplies of the Government at a reasonable and fair price. They owe their very existence to the Government. In morals it appears abhorrent that these corporations would desire to charge their biggest patron, the Government, more for the same service than they charge private parties. Congress is duty bound to the American people not to permit the railroads to have the legal right to gouge the Government.

In answer to the fifth question, it is my judgment, backed by high authority, that the Government can compel all of the railroads which received land grants or rights of way, and so forth, through acts of Congress, to transport the mails at a fair and reasonable price. We need no further legislation touching this question, in so far as the land-grant railroads are concerned. As to all other railroads, in the absence of any specific legislation on the subject, the Government might be helpless in an effort to force such railroads to transport the mails. It is clear that the Federal Constitution delegates the power to Congress to enact such legislation. No good lawyer would gainsay this proposition. The contractual relations between the Post Office Department and the railroads in the matter of transporting the mails is of such a character that the railroads generally contend that they can throw down the mail service at any time they may desire. In fact, some of the leading railroads have threatened to do so. Under the law as it exists now, I am inclined to the opinion that the railroads could not violate mail contracts already entered into between the Post Office Department and themselves by refusing to carry the mails. However, I am convinced that these railroads could refuse to enter into a new contract after the expiration of the existing contract, and under that condition the Government could not compel them to carry the mails. This is the law of the land, as determined in a number of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Gentlemen, under these circumstances, do you not think it the solemn duty of Congress to the people to enact such legislation as is necessary under the scope of the Constitution to make it compulsory on the part of this class of railroads to transport the mails?

The Post Office Department proposed a provision, which was included in the Moon bill, that passed the House, which obviates the dilemma above stated. The vital provision fixing a penalty of $5,000 for a railroad's refusal to carry the mails is sufficient legislation, within the purview of the Constitution, to compel the railroads to transport the mails. That provision in the Moon bill occasions the crux of the railroad opposition. That penalty provision means more than appears on the surface and is the real plank the people need. It carries with it the constitutional power to compel the railroads to carry the mails.

That is the chief reason these corporations are "bellyaching" so much against what they call the "Moon rider." I have demonstrated that the American people must have that penalty provision in order to be certain that the mails shall be transported by these public-service corporations.

The Post Office Department and the House of Representatives recognized that essential need and made it a part of the postal laws that passed the House at this session of Congress.

Gentlemen of the House, do you know that the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has stricken from the bill we passed that vital penalty provision? It is to be hoped that discussions on the floor of the Senate will develop the dire necessity of the penalty provision being placed in the bill again, and that the entire bill except the Madden amendment as it passed the House will be agreed to by the Senate.

In answer to the sixth question, I think it would be inexcusable and outrageous for Congress to throw down the administration, Postmaster General Burleson, and his assistants in their strenuous efforts to place the railroads under the law and make their legal status such that it would be impossible for these public carriers to ignore and inconvenience the people and enterprises of this country by refusing to carry the mails at a fair price.

To my mind the issue is clearly joined. Shall the railroads be left in position to charge the Government extortionate prices for mail service and to run roughshod over the people and refuse to carry the mails, when an effort might be made by the Post Office Department to prevent these corporations from gouging the Government?

The American people will some day realize the great work Postmaster General Burleson is doing to give the people proper mail facilities based on sound horse sense, efficiency, and economy. Appreciation will be shown him for his strenuous efforts to extend and protect the Parcel Post System for the benefit of the great body of the people. He will be remembered for his endeavor to secure legislation that kills the possibility of any railroad company refusing to carry the mails for just and equitable compensation.

Every student of this subject knows the failure of Congress to pass the postal legislation, including the vital provisions proposed by the Post Office Department which were in the Moon bill that passed the House, which I have discussed in this argument, and which the Senate committee eliminated in its report, hampers, jeopardizes, and materially curtails the operation of the parcel post.

The dereliction of Congress would cost the people many millions of dollars each year. It would leave the American people, through the agency of their great Government, incapacitated to compel the railroads to carry the mails if these corporations say no.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. BENNET. Is it not a fact—it is my recollection at least—that it is so-called space basis will increase the expenditures of the Post Office Department the first year?

Mr. QUIN. I agree with the statement that it would cost the people of the country a little more temporarily, but it is to be spent for the purpose of taking care of the great and growing Parcel Post System, and that is the reason why the railroad companies and the express companies of this country are "pussy-footing" around and endeavoring to keep it from becoming a law. The fact is, it is a more liberal provision for the railway companies than ever before passed Congress, and still they rise up and endeavor to prevent this legislation from becoming a law.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman will excuse me. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman will excuse me. I can not yield to him any further.

My fellow Members, who is willing to assume this responsibility? I am in favor of instructing the House conferees to stand pat for all the provisions of the Moon bill except the Madden amendment. I am in favor of the Post Office Department, the agency of the people, getting their ideas and suggestions enacted into law, instead of ignoring them, and substituting the suggestions and demands of the railroads.

Let the people get justice in this conflict.

From 1850 to 1871 a few "slick ducks" selected a set of burglar tools, gathered up a few maps of States and Territories, came to Washington, pried open the doors of Congress, secured railroad charters, and "toted" off whole States of public lands.

Now, in the year of 1916, a few special agents of the railroad and express companies are "pussy-footing" around the Nation's Capitol, endeavoring to pry out of Congress a few million dollars more yearly for transporting the mails, and the final objective, the destruction of the Parcel Post System.

Who will stand for this? [Applause.] The determined farmers of this country, asking a square deal in this matter, will march in a solid phalanx to the ballot boxes and make their majestic tread heard in the Senate Chamber and the halls of this House.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. Is it not true that the hearings before the Post Office and Post Roads Committee showed that the representatives of the railroads admitted upon examination that the purpose of destroying the space-rate pay was to destroy the future development of the parcel post?

Mr. QUIN. That is exactly what is the intent and purpose of this railway opposition to the passage of the space-bill provision as it actually was passed in the Moon bill. They are willing to let their pay stay a little less a year, as indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], than to accept the space provision, which every sensible man who is a student of the subject knows is the real avenue through which the Parcel Post System of this country will be extended. It is for the parcel-post development of this country that this space provision is really put into the law, and the objection of the railroads to the $5,000 penalty for refusal to carry the mails is based upon the proposition that they know that under the Constitution of the United States a penalty provision enacted by Congress makes it compulsory on the railways to carry the United States mails. That is the real reason why this fight has been in progress all this time. Ever since this provision was started in 1913 up until this good hour you have observed in the metropolitan papers of this country the railroad argument against the Moon bill. You have observed in a great many country districts all over this Republic newspaper articles which appeared to be editorials, but which in truth and in fact were so much alike that it was plain to the observant reader that they were plate matter sent out by some syndicate interested in the railroad and express companies against the people of this Republic who are demanding a development of the Parcel Post System, which the people are entitled to. When we go further into the question we gather at once the idea that the American people are on one side in this conflict and the great corporate interests are on the other side. No man can be mistaken in that if he studies this subject. This House has had Democracy enough about it to pass this bill, and we believe that under it the Parcel Post System will be developed to the benefit of all the people of this country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD on the problem of war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of war. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SAMUEL SCHWARZ.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make a speech which has a direct relation to political issues, although it may perhaps have some reference to the plank in the Democratic platform of 1912, which reads as follows:

> The constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the fullest protection of the United States Government both for himself and his property.

The particular matter concerning which I wish to address the House is the case of Samuel Schwarz, whose wife and relatives are residents of my congressional district, and who himself has been confined in various jails in Great Britain since October, 1914, without a charge against him since the early part of March, 1915.

In May last this House, at my request, passed a resolution requesting the President of the United States to report to the Congress what he had done to secure the release of Samuel Schwarz, an American citizen alleged to be unjustly deprived of his liberty by and under the authority of the Government of Great Britain; and in due course the President, through the Secretary of State, replied to that resolution of inquiry.

If the facts as set out in that reply were true, perhaps I ought not to interest myself in the case of Samuel Schwarz. I will detail the romance as reported by the Department of State. According to their version, one Samuel Schwarz, born in Hungary or Galicia—because they ascribe him to two countries—did come to this country prior to 1901, was naturalized in this country in 1901, but almost immediately—within less than a year—departed from this country, resided more than five years continuously in Hungary, and resided in other parts of Europe for nine years in all, and became either a notorious forger or a well-known international swindler—because the Department of State does not seem to be exactly certain which—and in 1914 was arrested and is now being detained because of this extraordinary criminal record. They ascribe as their reason for not interfering with the detention in the British prison the fact that a man naturalized in this country may expatriate himself; and they refer to section 15 of the act of 1906—the naturalization law—which, although they do not state it in their report, reads as follows:

> If any alien who shall have secured a certificate of citizenship under the provisions of this act shall, within five years after the issuance of such certificate, return to the country of his nativity, or go to any other foreign country, and take permanent residence therein, it shall be considered prima facie evidence of a lack of intention on the part of such alien to become a permanent citizen of the United States at the time of filing his application for citizenship, and, in the absence of countervailing evidence, it shall be sufficient in the proper proceeding to authorize the cancellation of his certificate of citizenship as fraudulent.

Now, there is a way provided in that same section for canceling such certificate of naturalization. A man must be served with notice. It is even provided that if he is out of the country he can be served by publication. He must have 60 days' notice. There must be a regular proceeding in a court. Not one of these steps has been taken. There is no allegation that any of them has been taken.

But I have no desire to rest my case on a technicality. Samuel Schwarz did not go abroad in 1902. He did not remain abroad permanently, and he has not forfeited his citizenship. Otherwise that particular part of the State Department's romance is correct in that respect.

Now let us see what proof is on either side. On page 5 of the President's answer:

> On July 19, 1902, he (Schwarz) obtained from the department a passport, No. 60551, upon an application in which he stated he was born in Budapest, Hungary, July 5, 1851; emigrated to this country February 11, 1894; obtained naturalization as a citizen of the United States in the district court of the United States in New York City November 25, 1901, and resided in New York City, where he followed the occupation of broker.

Now notice, there is no proof beyond the fact that he applied for and obtained a passport; no proof that he ever left the United States. Here is what the department says about that:

The department is not definitely informed as to the various movements of Schwarz between the time when he left the United States in 1902 and the time when he was in prison in Hungary in 1911, but from the information which the department has received the inference is that he had been established in Hungary during the greater part of that period.

There is no proof that he was imprisoned in Hungary in 1911. As a loyal American citizen, I propose to give the department the information which it could have obtained as easily as I obtained it, because they examined Schwarz in the jail at Brixton, England, and one of the questions was this question:

Where does your lawful wife now reside?
Answer. At 524 West One hundred and sixty-ninth Street, New York. I heard from her a week ago.

There was the point from which to start.

Now, I have in my hand an affidavit of Rose Schwarz, the wife of Samuel Schwarz, in which she says that she was married to him in 1895, in the City of Mexico; that her marriage certificate is in a trunk at 4 Rue Eugen Manuel, Paris, and that she is willing to authorize the American ambassador or any other representative of our Government to open her trunks, seven in number, and look at the contents. One of her sisters is a nurse in the French Army; that in the early part of 1902 she and her husband took an apartment at No. 22 West One hundred and twelfth Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, New York City; that they lived in that apartment from the early part of 1902 until April, 1907; that her mother and one of her sisters lived with them in that apartment; that during all the time from November, 1901, to April, 1907, her husband remained in the United States and did not once go abroad.

Oh, but you say that is an accomplice, the beautiful young adventuress who helped him to get out of jail in 1911. So I will not rest my case on that.

Here is a cold, unemotional fact. We vote in New York State at stated intervals, and Samuel Schwarz, residing at 22 West One hundred and twelfth Street, Borough of Manhattan, in the year 1902 voted in the second election district of the thirty-first assembly district, giving his age as 51; date of naturalization, November 25, 1901, which is the date the department gives; birthplace, Hungary, which is one of the places where the department says he was born; and he voted ballot No. 293.

In 1903, still in the same election district, in the same assembly district, same date of naturalization, same country and birth, he voted ballot 246.

This at the time when the department says he was residing in Hungary. If they had taken the trouble to look up the accessible election record of the county and city of New York, they would have found that he was residing at No. 22 West One hundred and twelfth Street, Borough of Manhattan, city of New York. The fact is the department neither knew nor cared about the status of this American citizen.

On the 20th of October, 1914, they wired the American consul general in London that Schwarz was an American citizen. In the spring of 1915 Mrs. Schwarz attempted to get from the office of the district clerk for the southern district of New York a certified copy of his papers, and, under orders from the State Department, a lawless proceeding, the clerk of the court refused to give her the certified copy. He took her money and sent the certified copy to the State Department. They had it, but with this paper in their possession, with that cable to the consul general on May 6, 1915, a month after they admitted the citizenship, they wrote to her at 524 West One hundred and sixty-ninth Street:

Replying to your letter of the 23d ultimo, relative to the detention by the British authorities in London of your husband, Samuel Schwarz, presumably a Hungarian subject—

And so forth.

I do not know whether they did not know or whether at that early day they were attempting to establish that this man was a Hungarian citizen. That is not all the proof that Schwarz lived at 22 West One hundred and twelfth Street. I suppose there is nothing more unemotional than the butcher. They are good people and business people; and here comes Mr. Friedman, residing at No. 540 West One hundred and forty-fourth Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, city of New York, who testified that he was engaged in the meat business; that from 1902 to 1907 he sold meat to Samuel Schwarz at No. 22 West One hundred and twelfth Street; that Schwarz used to come to his store and deal in person and order the meat, and he used to have the meat delivered at that apartment.

Now, in New York you do not live very long without paying rent, and there are records kept by the real estate offices. So Charles Reinecke, who lives at No. 216 Tremont Avenue, in the Borough of The Bronx, New York City, makes affidavit that he had charge of an apartment house known as No. 22 West One hundred and twelfth Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, New York City, for the last 15 years; that he knows Samuel Schwarz and Rose Schwarz, his wife; that they had an apartment on the third floor east; and that every month during those five years he went to the apartment and collected the rent from Samuel Schwarz; that he has still in hand his records from 1904 to 1907.

David Rand—and here comes in what you might call the social element—who lives at No. 99 Eighth Avenue, in the Borough of Manhattan, New York City, in the gentlemen's furnishing business, testifies that he knew Samuel Schwarz and Rose Schwarz, his wife, and had known them for about 14 years; that during the years 1902 to 1907 Mr. and Mrs. Schwarz resided in an apartment No. 22 West One hundred and twelfth Street; that it was his social custom to go to their apartment at that place and play pinochle; and that while the two men played pinochle the two women discussed various matters of interest to themselves. This affidavit is corroborated by his wife by affidavit.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. I think the gentleman has proven an alibi, but I would like to ask him if he submitted that information and affidavits to the Department of State?

Mr. BENNET. I will say to the gentleman that the first intimation that I had that there was a claim that Mr. Schwarz was not a citizen of the United States was the information that was contained in this printed pamphlet, and therefore I had no opportunity of submitting anything of that sort. I had been advised by the department up to that time, first, that they conceded Mr. Schwarz's American citizenship; second, that they thought it could be invalidated, because he had been arrested and convicted of crime in Hungary, which conviction occurred about 40 years ago; third, that it had been referred to the Attorney General for an opinion; and, fourth, that the Attorney General had given his opinion that the naturalization could not be invalidated. Therefore I was not called upon to give any proof, because the statement had been that Mr. Schwarz was a naturalized American citizen under date of November 25, 1901, and that with the most strenuous efforts the department was unable to successfully attack that citizenship.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Do I understand that this man Schwarz is now in prison in some foreign country?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. That is an unfortunate situation. I am one of those who believe that in a case of this kind this Government ought to use any measure necessary to enforce the rights of American citizenship, and while I do not think a man has a right to travel all around over the world and vex his Government by embarrassing it, yet, if he is in prison, under duress, helpless, the Government ought to go to him, no matter how far off he is.

Mr. BENNET. I am thankful for the acquiescence of the gentleman in what is absolutely an American doctrine.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. How long has this man Schwarz been in Europe?

Mr. BENNET. He went to Europe on a business matter in 1911.

Mr. BOOHER. In what business was he engaged at the time of his arrest?

Mr. BENNET. At the particular time that he was arrested he was engaged in a rather important transaction, which I will read from the affidavit of his wife:

In the latter part of 1911 he went to Europe because he was employed to carry through a very large financial transaction which, briefly speaking, was as follows:

Certain people in London owned an obligation of the Japanese Government which called for the payment by said Government of the sum of 125,000,000 francs, which said obligation was not due. Mr. Schwarz's principals employed him to secure people who would make a large loan to them upon the security of said obligation. Said transaction was on the verge of being completed when Mr. Schwarz was arrested.

Mr. BOOHER. With what was he charged at the time of his arrest?

Mr. BENNET. He was arrested by the British Government charged with being an unregistered alien enemy. That is, they claimed that he was an Austrian. Mr. Schwarz immediately claimed his American citizenship. Of course, he was like about 98 per cent of Americans abroad at that time, and had no passport or anything of that sort. People did not think it was necessary. He gave to the authorities of the jail money with which to cable to the United States to get the proof that he was an American citizen. They took his money, but they did not cable. They convicted him of being an unregistered alien enemy, and his sentence of six months expired in April, 1915. Since that time there has been no criminal charge of any character against him. Does that answer the gentleman?

Mr. BOOHER. He has been held in jail since that time without bail, and no charge made against him of any kind?

Mr. BENNET. That is true.

Mr. BOOHER. I will say to the gentleman that I do not understand why he is not entitled to some protection.

Mr. BENNET. I want to do Mr. Lansing, Secretary of State, the justice to say that he took exactly the same position that the gentleman takes. About January of this year I went up and had an interview with Mr. Lansing. I told him that his department claimed that this man was a bad man; that they said at that time that he was a notorious forger; that they also said that he was claimed to be a bigamist. I said to Mr. Lansing that under the common law a man is presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty, and that there was one of several things that must be done, either charges must be made against this American citizen or he must be discharged from imprisonment, or he must be deported from Great Britain, or his naturalization must be invalidated. Secretary Lansing agreed with me. He sent me to Mr. Polk, the Counselor of the department, with instructions to proceed to get that man out, but Mr. Lansing does not seem to have paramount influence in all portions of his department.

There is a reason why that man remains in jail. A man does not sell the obligation of a foreign government that calls for the payment at a subsequent time of $25,000,000 without becoming entitled to a fairly large commission. I do not know what his commission is, but the State Department told me the first day I went up there when they took me around behind a door in the Bureau of Citizenship and told me the man was a notorious forger, that his claimed commission was $450,000.

Mr. BOOHER. And is that sufficient to keep him in jail?

Mr. BENNET. That has been sufficient to keep him in jail since that time.

Mr. BOOHER. That would not be a very good reason ordinarily.

Mr. BENNET. That seems to have been a very good reason, but I want to say to the gentleman that I do not think an American administration or an American Department of State ought to stand in with people in a foreign country to keep a man with a claim like that in jail where he can not prosecute it.

Here is a document from the British Government which states why on the 7th of July, 1915, he was being held in jail:

MADAM: I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 25th ultimo, and to inform you in reply that your husband is held here under order of deportation made by the secretary of state for home affairs—

Well, the ocean has been open, ships have been running, and it is now nearly a year——

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. What was the date of that letter?

Mr. BENNET. July 7, 1915.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. A year ago?

Mr. BENNET. Nearly a year ago, and our own department has acquiesced in all this. They have not been very consistent in their statements. On page 3 of this statement is quoted a letter under date of December 1, 1915, in which they state that—

Mr. Schwarz or Stern is a notorious forger.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five or six minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for six minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. They stated on the 1st of December, 1915, that he was a notorious forger. They have dropped that charge. On page 2 they allude to his wife "Bertha," in Budapest, Hungary. It is his sister "Bertha," not his wife. The department never investigated. They allude to and on page 3 make this statement:

Schwarz was given an opportunity to explain his foreign residence in a statement which he made before the office of the consul general in Berlin.

They say later on that is attached to dispatch No. 3174 from the consul at London. So far as I have been able to find out, Schwarz was never in Berlin in his life and never made any statement to the consul general, and it is not attached to the dispatch. They say, on pages 6 and 7, that—he was in prison at Budapest in 1911, and that he never married.

Mrs. Schwarz lives at 529 West One hundred and sixty-ninth Street. I have given the place and the date when he married her, and the present location, and his marriage certificate, and the animus and the attitude of mind of the consul general is shown by this quotation from the dispatch of March 2, 1916. I will read the paragraph:

Very soon after the arrest of this man it transpired that his name was Samuel Schwarz—

That has always been his name—and that a person of that name had been naturalized on November 25, 1901.

That fact was cabled to him by the Secretary of State on October 20, 1914, nearly two years ago.

Therefore, unless Samuel Schwarz obtained citizenship by fraud or expatriated himself after November 25, 1901, his citizenship is valid—

And then he offered an entirely gratuitous insult to him—and is entitled to inflict his presence upon the people of the United States.

It is a new day in American diplomacy when a consul general of the United States, speaking in reference to an American citizen against whom there were no charges, says that unless they can do away with his naturalization he may have the power to inflict his presence upon the people of the United States.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. What was the reason for his going under an assumed name and giving the name of Stern?

Mr. BENNET. I am coming to that; I have no desire to conceal anything. There is one charge against Mr. Schwarz that can be proved. He is a little promiscuous in his attention to the ladies. I do not know the status of adultery in England, whether it is a crime or not. In some States of this country it is a serious offense, and there is no question that when Mr. Schwarz was living in London at the Hotel Savoy under his own name of Schwarz with his wife he was unquestionably maintaining another establishment over which another woman presided and where he was known under the name of "Samuel Stern." It was his misfortune that when he was arrested by the British Government under the allegation that he was an Austrian subject he was arrested at the other establishment where he was known under the name of "Samuel Stern," and under that name he was incarcerated. That is true—no doubt about it—but I do not think it is any reason for keeping an American citizen indefinitely in a British jail. It was a reprehensible act, a violation of the seventh commandment, a violation of decency; but no reason for perpetual incarceration or the withdrawal of American citizenship.

Now, this consul general says that this woman, Rosa Goldman, now claiming to be his wife, should be deported as an undesirable alien. Well, in England and Germany they have such laws that you can pick up any alien and deport him because he is undesirable, but we have still the old-fashioned American desire to have a man condemned before he is executed in this country, and there is no law on the statute books of this country by which you can pick up a man of foreign birth on the whim of an official and deport him as being an undesirable alien. This consul general ought to come back and imbibe a little of Americanism and learn a little American law before attempting to pass upon the rights of American citizens.

Now, here is a most unique decision——

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. One more question, please.

Mr. BENNET. May I have my time extended five minutes, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. You speak of that claim. That arises out of the commission for the transaction of business between Japan and Austria, if I get it?

Mr. BENNET. No, sir. I can give it to the gentleman. There were men residing in London who owned an obligation of the Japanese Government, not yet due, which called for the payment when due of 125,000,000 francs. They desired to realize on that obligation. They employed Mr. Schwarz to raise money on it, and he succeeded in doing so, and just as the matter was about to be culminated he was arrested under the allegation that he was a Hungarian subject, incarcerated in jail, and, of course, he has not been in a position where he can proceed to collect. And our State Department is helping those people to keep him out of his money. Now, here is the consul general's proof. If this was not a serious matter, the conclusion that this consul draws from the facts he stated would be the most humorous thing since Dogberry appointed a fit and senseless man for constable. He says:

I am inclosing herewith, as directed, an application for a passport, an affidavit to overcome presumption of expatriation, and the report of an interview by questions and answers. These questions and answers are not of themselves of great importance, except that they contain a number of admissions which effectually prove that Schwarz is identical with the individual who served time in Austria-Hungary. These admissions include a confession of interest in aviation matters, acknowledgment that he knew Rosa Goldman many years before he became naturalized—

It is not an offense in the State of New York to be well acquainted with a woman before you marry her—and an acknowledgment that he carried on his business in the Franciscan Bazaar at Budapest.

And from those weighty facts the consul general draws the conclusion that Samuel Schwarz was in jail in Austria-Hungary at a particular time.

Let me start at the beginning of the examination and read the first two questions. That will be enough.

First. What is your name?
Samuel Schwarz.
Second. Were you not at the time interested in aviation performances in the United States Army?

I did not know what time. Schwarz did not know what time. The consul general did not know what time. Schwarz did pretty well under the circumstances. He said:

Wanted to build a balloon. Dr. Fabrica and I built a half balloon in Frankfort on Main, 1906, 7, or 8. Built balloon at the exposition at Frankfort merely for commercial purposes. It was no good, consequently a commercial failure. Have never had any interest in aviation. Built aeroplane in Frankfort for purpose of selling it, but it failed, and we lost money on it.

Those who are interested in the other questions can read them. The time he kept the shop in Budapest was 40 years ago, but that does not appear in the examination. It is alleged also that he was in Graz, Hungary, in 1911, and his wife helped him out of jail. She swears, so far as she knows, she never was in Graz, Hungary, and so far as she knows, he never was in jail and that she never helped him out of jail. They say he was known as the Duke of Suben. The only important discrepancy between that statement and the facts as they set them out here is that the alleged Duke of Suben was born in Galicia. This Mr. Schwarz was born in Hungary. According to the proof, Mr. Schwarz has spent the last 20 years very largely in the United States. They claim that the man who was the Duke of Suben spent most of his time in Europe. He is three years older than Mr. Schwarz, and, in addition to that, his first name is different, his middle name is different, and he spells his last name in a different manner. Otherwise, the thing is complete. Samuel Schwarz is one man and Sam Lewis Schwartz is the other, one born in Hungary and the other in Galicia, yet they say they are the one identical person.

Now, upon what do they base this? Upon a picture in the International Police Gazette. That is the high proof on which our State Department depends. When I was a boy in New York State and used to go to the barber shop to get my hair cut it was my surreptitious pleasure to read the Police Gazette. I do not know whether it is yet published or not, but at those times I believed it implicitly. Evidently the State Department believes in it still. When I used to see those pictures, with their glaring scenes, I used to think that they were as true as Holy Writ. I have grown up. The State Department still lingers in childhood's happy hours.

But the idea of taking away a man's citizenship on the mere fact that there was a picture in the Police Gazette under which appears his name! There is not a man here that has not had his picture published in some locality with some other name under it, and the ladies who have had their names published under a picture of Lydia Pinkham are without count.

I shall refer these papers to the State Department. I do not know whether Mr. Schwarz will get justice or not; but at least I shall endeavor to obtain the scant justice that he is not to be punished uncondemned.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman expect to accomplish by setting out all these facts?

Mr. BENNET. Here?

Mr. MANN. Anywhere.

Mr. BENNET. I hope the American State Department will take a little interest in an American citizen, and I know of no other way than by rising in my place as a Member of the House of Representatives and giving the facts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, I take it, will agree with me that the response recently sent to the House concerning this matter was properly prepared by the counselor for the British Embassy, and not by anybody in the State Department. Why does not the gentleman take this up with the officer of the British Embassy directly instead of through the State Department?

Mr. BENNET. I do not realize what the gentleman's statement is.

Mr. MANN. I read the response.

Mr. BENNET. I know you did.

Mr. MANN. I did not think that anybody in the State Department had read such a response. I concluded it was written by the counselor in the British Embassy.

Mr. BENNET. I will be very frank with the gentleman, and I will ascribe to him the same attitude, that neither he nor I have sunk to the low level of Americanism that we will go to a foreign embassy to the neglect of our State Department to obtain rights for an American citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. BENNET. Yes——

Mr. MANN. I think that response must have slipped by the Secretary of State and the President, both, as a formal matter, without their ever examining it or knowing what was in it.

Mr. BENNET. Well, I join the gentleman in the hope that that is true.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he can get the right kind of action at the State Department after the 4th of next March. [Applause on the Republican side.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 16, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 16, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we lift our hearts to Thee for Thy guidance and blessing as we have come to face for another day the responsibilities and duties which, in Thy providence, have come to us.

We pray Thee to guide us by Thy divine counsel. Give us the constant influence of Thy Holy Spirit. We pray that Thy blessing may abide upon all men who, in the providence of God, have been called to the places of influence and power, whose judgments come at last to be the determining forces shaping the policies of a great Nation.

May these men be controlled by the spirit and truth of the living God. May they properly measure the degree of responsibility that has come to them, and have the right estimate and the proper conception of the values of the moral and the spiritual in our governmental life; and through Thy grace may they be enabled so to determine and guide the course of this Nation as that it may perpetually stand for the great ideals for which Thou has brought it into being. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a communication addressed to me in the nature of a memorial, signed by the president, the vice president, and general secretary of the National Business League of America, and also a letter from R. G. Wagner, president of the American Transatlantic Co., of New York, relative to the so-called ship-purchase bill, which is now before the Committee on Commerce. I ask that the communications be printed in the RECORD, without reading, and that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the communications were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL BUSINESS LEAGUE OF AMERICA,
Chicago, June 9, 1916.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The National Business League of America, an organization which has had 20 years of active and resultful work, and which numbers among its members many of America's best and most unselfish business men, submits to you its views on the bill known as H. R. 15455, recently passed by the House of Representatives and now before your honorable body.

The league submits, first of all, the nonpartisan efforts of two decades to improve the condition of our country through national legislation, especially such as vitally affects general business interests. Its work in the reorganization of the Consular Service on the merit system, creation of the Department of Commerce, irrigation of the arid lands of the West, and the Federal reserve law are some of its important activities, which undoubtedly are familiar to many of the Members of the Senate. It has enjoyed the confidence of every national administration from President McKinley down to the present time, because its work has always been for the benefit of all the people.

One of the most important of its activities has been to impress the Congress, business men, and the public in general with the fact that our scant merchant marine has always lacked sufficient tonnage to adequately serve our Navy in time of war and to help carry the commerce of our mines, our factories, and our farms to distant parts of the world. It has, therefore, noted with satisfaction the work of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives in connection with the introduction and passage of the above-mentioned bill as initiative in the right direction, and while it admits there are imperfections in the bill, it feels that its enactment would tend more toward a greater preparedness than any measure introduced in the Houses of Congress during the past 50 years.

As you gentlemen are no doubt aware, the bill provides first of all for the establishment of a United States shipping board. There is no difference of opinion, the league believes, on this point. It provides that in addition to the five commissioners to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce shall be ex officio members. The league heartily favors this provision, for the reason that the executive duties of these officials will practically interlock with the work of the shipping board—the Secretary of the Navy by reason of the fact that these merchant ships are to be auxiliaries of the Navy; that they are to be used also for the purpose of building up a naval reserve, and that some of the military transports, not now used by the Navy, will be transferred to the shipping board; the Secretary of Commerce by reason of the fact that he is in charge of the Bureau of Navigation, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Lighthouse and Life-Saving Service, and probably many of his officials will be needed to advise with the shipping board.

The provision, section 5, whereby "the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to have constructed and equipped in American shipyards and navy yards or elsewhere, giving preference, other things being equal, to domestic yards; or to purchase, lease, or charter vessels suitable, as far as the commercial requirements of the marine trade of the United States may permit, for use as naval auxiliaries or Army transports, or for other naval or military purposes," coupled with the further provision of section 14 that "for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 5 and 11 the Secretary of the Treasury, upon request of the board, approved by the President, shall from time to time issue and sell or use any of the bonds of the United States now available in the Treasury under the acts of August 5, 1909, February 4, 1910, and March 2, 1911, relating to the issue of bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal, to a total amount not to exceed $50,000,000," will give the Nation the opportunity it has never had since the Civil War of establishing the nucleus for a merchant marine.

Arguments have been advanced against the Government investing $50,000,000 in ships at this time for the reason that prices are too high. No sincere advocate of preparedness from the standpoint of national defense and the safeguarding of our commercial prosperity could consistently urge any such argument, for the reason that these ships are to be used for two purposes—for carrying a greater portion of our over-sea commerce (and everyone admits that there is great need for this purpose), and, secondly, as auxiliaries for the use of the Navy. No one would vote against the Government building or purchasing battleships because prices are too high; and as these ships are in a sense as important as battleships, it must be apparent that this argument of high prices should not be used at all. Aside from this, the probability is that the prices of ships will be higher before they will be lower, and we need ships now for both the above-stated purposes, and have no right to oppose the purchase or construction of these ships because some one may think prices are too high.

The point raised that these ships could not be purchased or constructed at this time is also one that should have no bearing on the proposition, for the Government will find the same difficulty in building naval ships, which must be built in shipyards, that it would find in having merchant ships built, and the sooner it starts the better, for surely nothing can be gained by waiting. Aside from that, with the great abundance of material that is used in the construction of ships, with the fact that the Nation is back of a movement to build up its merchant fleet, that its shipping board is going to devote its entire time to this purpose, would bring about a greater expansion in shipbuilding in this country. The shipbuilders are a little fearful about this present expansion, because they are not sure whether this movement is temporary or permanent, but with the Government's backing permanency would be assured, and shipyards would be greatly enlarged.

It seems almost absurd for anyone to oppose this bill on the ground that it means Government ownership and operation, because there is not the slightest probability of Government operation, and as far as Government ownership is concerned it would be best that the Government did not sell these ships. It does not sell its battleships; it owns them, and in view of the fact that these ships are built with the thought in mind that they may be used to increase naval efficiency, surely it would be better for the Government to own them instead of allowing them to lie idle and rot at the docks, to lease them, or, as a last resort, to sell them on condition, of course, that they can be reclaimed. These ships would be an important addition to any preparedness program. It is undisputed that the half-million tons, which is the amount that probably could be purchased for the $50,000,000 invested, are absolutely necessary to properly take care of our present naval fleet, and when we add to that, as we will, more auxiliaries, even more will be necessary.

There are other arguments in favor of the enactment of section 11. The principal one and, in the judgment of the league, the strongest—for it believes that the Government will be able to sell or lease all the ships constructed under this act—is that because of the fact that the Government will be paying such a low rate of interest and will not be obliged to pay promotion fees usually incumbent upon corporations which construct ships, the Government will be able to lease on such favorable terms that there will be a great many more requests for ships than the Government can possibly supply. The league would much prefer that the amendment, whereby the Government is to dispose of its ships in five years, be left out of the bill, for it feels satisfied that if the Government operated such ships that it could not sell or lease, in the event of such contingency, these ships could be used in opening up new trade routes or covering such routes where improper service is given to this country, and the Government could also use these ships to prevent the possibility of any unfair competition that would put American shippers out of business in the event that the second provision of section 15 would not be effective enough.

Probably the most important provision of the bill—although section 12, whereby a naval auxiliary reserve will be built up, is very important—is section 13, which gives the board the right to "investigate the relative cost of building merchant vessels in the United States and in foreign maritime countries, and the relative cost, advantages, and disadvantages of operating in the foreign trade, vessels under United States registry, and under foreign registry." It also states that the board "shall examine the navigation laws of the United States and the rules and regulations thereunder and make such recommendations to the Congress as it deems proper for the amendment, improvement, and revision of such laws, and for the development of the American merchant marine," and that it shall also "investigate the legal status of mortgage loans on vessel property, with a view to means of improving the security of such loans and of encouraging investment in American shipping." The league can not conceive of anything more important for the upbuilding of the merchant marine than this section. It has been claimed time and time again that our navigation laws injure our shipping. If that be a fact this shipping board would be able to ascertain this condition in a much better manner than by the mere acceptance of the statement of any shipper who is interested. Should it be found that there are laws inimical to American shipping, the board's recommendations would unquestionably have great weight with the Congress, and repeal would speedily follow. There are also, from time to time, statements made that there are disadvantages in the relative cost of operating and constructing ships. The board can easily make investigations and recommendations in this particular. The board could also formulate plans for the financing and securing of mortgage loans on vessel property so that American capital would be encouraged to make investments in American shipping.

The league doubts that anyone who has made a study of the recent investigation of the Congress in connection with shipping, in so far as it relates to discrimination against American shippers, divulging of trade secrets, retaliation, etc., would oppose any part of section 15, which covers these points. The league also wishes to call attention to the fact that valuable suggestions of the New York Chamber of Commerce have been incorporated in section 15 verbatim.

There are many other important provisions in this bill that might be touched upon, but the league feels that it should not burden you with a too lengthy statement. The league is satisfied, and some of its public-spirited members who are interested have visited many cities of the country and addressed the various chambers of commerce, urging support of the measure, and in not a single case where a chamber of commerce under its by-laws had the right to act on this matter, was there a refusal to adopt resolutions favoring the passage of the bill. As a means of preparedness, so far as the Navy of America would be augmented, the league feels that it is also of the most vital importance. What is the use of building more naval ships if we do not have auxiliaries to protect them? Why should we keep the American Nation fettered by its lack of needful facilities in transporting its rapidly expanding commerce when the ready means are at its disposal?

We address this timely appeal to you and ask you to vote and otherwise work for the passage of this important bill, so that favorable action may be unanimous and in no sense partisan. Verily this is a crisis in American affairs when every man in public and in private life should throw partisanship to the winds and use every endeavor to insure the safety and commercial supremacy of the Nation. In this way we may have effective preparedness.

PHILETUS W. GATES,
President.

Vice President.
AUSTIN A. BURNHAM,
General Secretary.

AMERICAN TRANSATLANTIC CO.,
New York, June 12, 1916.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The pendency before you of the ship purchase bill induces me respectfully to submit for your consideration some suggestions pertinent to the subject which are the outgrowth of recent experience in an effort to add to the tonnage of the American merchant marine.

Summed up, this experience forces the conclusion that without adequate coaling facilities always available along the ocean lanes and marine insurance entirely removed from British control an American merchant marine, however large, will never be able to preserve its independence.

The facts are these:

All of the 11 ships of this company are foreign built, were always neutral, were purchased in the spring of 1915 from neutral owners, and were registered under the American flag under act of Congress of August 18, 1914.

Thereafter four of the ships were seized by foreign Governments and are held pending prize-court proceedings. The remaining seven ships, by agreement between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States, are declared immune from capture until such time as the prize court shall have determined the status of those detained. But meanwhile all seven have been put upon the British blacklist.

Here, then, is the point:

The British blacklist, which may be laid against a ship or ships at any time on any pretext, means and has so worked out—

That British interests can not employ ships so blacklisted in any capacity;

That many—in fact, most—American interests will not employ them through fear of British boycott; and

That bunker coal can not be purchased for the ships so blacklisted in any British possession, nor from British coal dealers in neutral possessions, nor from any neutral dealer in any neutral territory without subjecting such dealer to British boycott.

Similarly, with a blacklist declared, British underwriters refuse insurance to all ships thus placed under the ban.

Under these handicaps imposed by the British—and it is always possible for the British Government thus to handicap its trade rivals—we have had the unique experience of endeavoring to operate our ships as tramp steamers since their blacklisting in October, 1915, and this experience has very forcibly brought out the pitiable condition of American steamers when they are thus put under the ban of the British Government.

This experience has demonstrated to us that outside of the United States 85 per cent of the coal supply for ships is controlled by British interests, and that it is next to impossible to secure adequate insurance facilities except from British underwriters, who will write no insurance upon a ship that has been blacklisted by their Government.

With the exception of Porto Rico, we have no coaling stations on any of the islands in the Atlantic Ocean. The entire chain of West Indian Islands in the sea lane from the United States to the east coast of South America is controlled by foreign Governments, mostly British, and practically all of the coal depots in the South American ports are under British control.

I am therefore of the opinion that this country can never have a successful merchant marine, whether Government owned or privately owned, until it becomes independent of foreign domination for these two fundamental requisites, namely, bunker coal and adequate insurance facilities.

Next to the above requirements it will be necessary to provide for the greater cost of operating American ships, which is mostly due to the higher wages paid American seamen. For this I respectfully suggest the following remedy:

Let the United States Government pay to such American seamen employed by American steamers in foreign trade, who will enlist as naval reserves, annually a sum which, when added to the average wages paid to seamen of leading maritime nations, would make a fair American wage. I estimate this cost for 5,000,000 tons of freight-carrying capacity at $5,000,000, based on 25,000 men at $200 per man. Such a plan may prove much more acceptable than a direct subsidy, and, if workable, would at once aid in the upbuilding of a greater American merchant marine and also in the securing of an adequate naval reserve.

Yours, very respectfully. R. G. WAGNER, President.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Richard Hargrave, of Jacksonville, Fla., remonstrating against the adoption of section 7 of the Post Office appropriation bill. I ask that the telegram be printed in the RECORD.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.
The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:
We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that the door is ever ajar, and whosoever will may enter into the holy of holies and commune with Thee, feel the touch of infinite purity, the warmth of infinite love, the strength of infinite power; be refreshed, purified, and strengthened for the tasks which wait upon us; so we come, encouraged by the promise, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: For everyone that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?" Amen.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman what these editorials are about? If this was the gentleman's own statement I should have no objection, but if it is to crowd the RECORD with editorials from papers like the Washington Star and Times I shall have to object.
Mr. BENNET. They are of the same character as those that have been offered from the other side—political editorials.
Mr. HOWARD. Well, if this side is doing it, I am not going to object. I withdraw my objection.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 819), ordered to be printed.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.
Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole——
Mr. MANN. That is, those in order to-day.
The SPEAKER. Yes; the bills in order to-day. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

HEIRS OF JOHN M. WAPLES.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11749) for the relief of the heirs of John M. Waples.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects, and the bill goes over.

LENA SCHMIEDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3294) for the relief of Lena Schmieder.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill goes over without prejudice.

MARTHA HAZELWOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7427) for the relief of Martha Hazelwood.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill goes over.

ESTATE OF JOHN STEWART, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3388) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill goes over.

JAMES L. YOKUM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2208) for the relief of James L. Yokum.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. BENNET. Is there any precedent for a payment to a man under these circumstances? Mr. Yokum is asking to be paid because he killed a mail robber.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman that I do not know of any precedent; but, as the gentleman doubtless knows, there is a standing reward offered by the Government for the arrest of persons robbing the mails. This man did not arrest the robber, but in his effort to arrest him he killed him. Now, if he had simply wounded the robber, or if the robber had surrendered, Mr. Yokum would have received from the Government the sum of $1,000 for what he did. The committee believed that it was proper that he should be allowed the sum that he would have received if he had simply made the arrest. Therefore the committee reported the bill.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] says that when he was on the committee there were several bills of this kind reported out and passed. Therefore, as the precedent has been established, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have read this bill and read the report. I think it is a splendid measure. When the Post Office appropriation bill was going through the House it had incorporated in it a provision proposing to make general just such conditions as these. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had before it a case originating down in the State of Florida, where a clerk killed a robber. He had to do it in order not only to protect the property of the Government, but to protect himself. He was not able to get the reward. The committee thought it would remedy that defect. As stated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], if he had arrested the man and had taken him alive, he would have received the benefit of the reward, but the provision which the committee incorporated in the Post Office bill was defeated on the floor of the House. I am glad that no one is going to object to this bill. I believe there is another one on the calendar something like it, where a postmaster was killed in the State of Kentucky, and I hope that no one will object to that.

Mr. ROUSE. That bill has been passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay James L. Yokum, a citizen of Red Bluff, Tehama County, in the State of California, reward for the arrest of mail-train robber on the night of November 8, 1912.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MOEUR-PAFFORD CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13496) for the relief of the Moeur-Pafford Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill goes over.

EDWARD J. LYNCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14814) for the relief of Edward J. Lynch, collector of internal revenue for the district of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Edward J. Lynch, collector of internal revenue for the district of Minnesota, and his accounts with the sum of $35,207.14½, being the value of currency, coin, and various kinds of stamps charged to him and which were stolen from the vault of his office during the night of January 6, 1916, together with other stamps, which have since been returned to him.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3405) for the relief of the Maine Central Railroad Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,566 to the Maine Central Railroad Co. for a special train from Mount Desert Ferry, Me., to New York City, conveying foreign mails from the steamship Kronprinzessin Cecile, per order of the Acting Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service at Boston Mass., August 6, 1914.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment: After the figures "$1,566" insert the words "which sum is hereby appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the figures "$1,566," in line 5, the words "which sum is hereby appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my impression is that the amendment is not necessary. Where we used to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury should pay a certain amount of money to some one, that was held not to be an appropriation. I am under the impression that where you provide that they shall pay a certain sum of money "out of money not otherwise appropriated" in the Treasury, that is considered to be an appropriation. That is the form of bills in recent years, almost invariably, I will say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I unfortunately had this matter up in the Fifty-ninth Congress in connection with a bill of my own which was passed almost in this form, and the Secretary of the Treasury refused to pay the money, holding that it was an authorization and not an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. But if the gentleman will examine the bill that he has reference to, he will find that it did not provide that the Secretary of the Treasury should pay the money "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." It provided only that he should pay the money. That was not an appropriation, and was only an authorization.

Mr. BENNET. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The reason for the form that was subsequently adopted was that I called the attention of the Committee on Claims to my misfortune, and that for several years they amended bill after bill so as to comply with the form suggested in my case by the Secretary of the Treasury; and if the gentleman will look at any general appropriation bill—the one just reported, which I have not seen, but which I am very certain contains both provisions—he will find that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay "out of any money," and also the provision that the sum is "hereby appropriated." The amendment can not do any harm, and may save the beneficiary of the bill a lot of trouble.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I believe the gentleman raised this point once before?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Since that time the clerk of the Committee on Claims has had some correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to this matter, and my information is that the Secretary states that the bill is in proper form, and that the language suggested by the gentleman is not at all necessary.

Mr. BENNET. This particular bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. A bill in which the identical language was used providing an appropriation.

Mr. BENNET. If the Secretary of the Treasury will pay the money upon it, I am satisfied.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. He has paid a great many.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

D. B. BARBOUR AND A. P. GLADDEN.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. To ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 4368 and consider it in lieu of the next bill on the calendar, which is identical.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the House bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11584) for the relief of D. B. Barbour and A. P. Gladden, copartners, doing business under the firm name of Brown, Barbour & Gladden.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. Is this the House or Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. It is the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. I want to hear the Senate bill read first.

The SPEAKER. It seems this bill has gone to the committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had better ask to pass this over temporarily.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will ask that that be done, although the clerk of the committee informs me it has never gone to the committee. This statement states that the original Senate bill is at the Speaker's desk. However, I ask unanimous consent that the matter be passed over temporarily.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the matter will be passed over temporarily.

There was no objection.

P. J. CARLIN CONSTRUCTION CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4537) for the relief of the P. J. Carlin Construction Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DRS. BLAIR AND BLAKE AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10931) for the relief of Blair and Blake.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $650 to Blair and Blake, of Sheffield, Ala., in full payment of all claims and demands for surgical service rendered by them to employees of the United States Government who were injured by a premature dynamite explosion while in the performance of the duties assigned them by the Government engineers, and while engaged in channel work in the Tennessee River at Cogers Island near Smithsonia, Ala., on the 25th day of June, 1914.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 3, page 2, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums of $375 to Drs. Blair and Blake, $25 to Dr. W. J. Maxwell, $25 to Dr. R. C. Evans, and $4.15 to J. B. Blalock, all of Sheffield, Ala., in full payment of all claims and demands for surgical service rendered and material supplied by them to employees of the United States Government who were injured by a premature dynamite explosion while in the performance of duties assigned to them by the Government engineers, and while engaged in channel work in the Tennessee River at Cogers Island near Smithsonia, Ala., on the 25th day of June, 1914."

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the committee recommended an amendment to the title; the title is incorrect, and while it is not printed in the bill as it should be; it is in the report.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The title of the bill should be amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Drs. Blair and Blake, Dr. W. J. Maxwell, Dr. R. C. Evans, and J. B. Blalock."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Without objection, the title will be amended accordingly.

There was no objection.

FRANK J. DEUTSCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1777) for the relief of Frank J. Deutsch.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Frank J. Deutsch, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, for injuries sustained while employed in the Coast Guard at Sturgeon Bay, Wis.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "appropriated," insert the following: "In full settlement of all claims of any nature whatsoever that the said Frank J. Deutsch may have against the United States Government."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JOHN H. CHRISTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8010) making an appropriation to pay the legal representatives of the estate of John H. Christy, deceased, to wit: E. J. Christy, Mary L. Christy, Sallie A. Christy, W. S. Christy, T. J. Christy, and Julia H. Bryson, and the estates of J. R. Christy, W. D. Christy, and H. P. Christy, heirs at law of John H. Christy, late of the State of Georgia, in full for any claim for salary and allowance made by reason of the election of the said John H. June 8, 1916.

SARAH S. PLANK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13785) for the relief of Sarah S. Plank.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Sarah S. Plank, widow of Ed. S. Plank, who was killed in the discharge of his duties as a United States officer in seeking to enforce the United States laws in the Indian country.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

In line 5 strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. There were two men killed at the same time, I believe, in the discharge of their duty as United States officers seeking to enforce the United States laws in the Indian Territory. I believe those were the liquor laws, if I recall correctly. The committee reported favorably upon one of the bills for the relief of the widow of one of the persons who was killed, and reported adversely on the other bill, one for the relief of a dependent daughter, or claimed to be dependent, at least, upon the officer who was killed. I am very glad the committee really drew the line; glad that they showed careful study of the subject, though, I must say, I can not see much difference in the bills. Both officers were killed at the same time, in the same effort to enforce the liquor laws. The widow of one was dependent upon her former husband, who was killed, and the daughter of the other, who was described as a delicate, frail woman, with no income, or no means of support except a small salary as clerk, stated that she was dependent upon her father. I am not disposed to criticize the committee, because perhaps there is a distinction.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The committee thought so.

Mr. MANN. I thought that generally where we pay claims of this sort to persons who are injured or killed in the Government service we did not draw too fine a line upon whether they were wholly dependent. It may be a good thing to do. I hope if the committee is drawing that line it will keep on drawing it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. There was no statement before the committee as to what salary this lady was drawing, the daughter of one of the deceased officers, but simply that she was employed as a clerk. We had a statement that the widow was really dependent on her husband; that he left her nothing; but we were not satisfied as to the statement in regard to the other case, and we thought perhaps it was proper to leave that matter undisposed of. If later on we think the facts justify it, perhaps we will report the bill.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, there is not much information contained in the report. The report in both cases contains a letter from Mr. B. A. Enloe, jr., United States marshal, who, instead of giving information, as was his province to give, gives advice as to what Congress ought to do, what policy Congress ought to pursue. The committee desired the information, the facts. Mr. Enloe did not give the facts, but tells us what our policy ought to be.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I think we had other statements besides the one from Mr. Enloe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN STEAGALL.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to C. E. Anderson, packer, United States Geological Survey, the sum of $40, and said amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be in full payment of all losses incurred and damage sustained by said C. E. Anderson in the purchase of a horse on April 25, 1910, for use by survey parties in Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. KNICKERBOCKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11843) for the relief of Charles E. Knickerbocker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have read the report in this case, and I do not see anything in it except that which appeals to the human side of life. There is no liability at all. Apparently the committee assigns the reason for allowing the claim to the fact that the accident occurred very closely to the time when Congress passed a general law which would have applied to it.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply reimburses him for the time that he lost owing to the accident. But the committee thought that as long as Congress has seen fit to pass such a law now, that it would be only fair that he should be reimbursed for the time lost—no more than that; just the time lost—and that is all the committee is paying.

Mr. COX. Of course, if this claim is allowed it will simply open the door for many other claims of a similar nature, and the claimants will come in and say that they were hurt within six months or a year from the passage of the law.

Mr. EDMONDS. This is not a precedent. They have passed similar bills to this before through the committee and passed them through the House, I believe.

Mr. COX. You say:

As the accident to the claimant occurred prior to the law approved March 9, 1914, which provides that leave of absence with full pay may be granted to certain employees of the Postal Service, including letter carriers, injured while on duty, during the period of disability, it is only thought equitable and just that the loss of compensation for the 5 months and 10 days, amounting to $533.33, should be paid.

Now, he got hurt on the 20th day of January, within a period of less than three months immediately preceding the passage of that law, and that is the only ground upon which the committee undertakes to base the propriety of this claim.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is the moral basis.

Mr. COX. And it is only proximity to the time when Congress passed the general law.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman will find that the committee has passed bills two or three years before the passage of the general law.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have just passed the bill H. R. 11685, in which Ivy L. Merrill, a Pottawatomie schoolteacher, was injured. That bill is on a par with several other bills that have already been passed by this House.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM W. DANENHOWER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution H. Res. 252, reported in lieu of H. R. 8698, a bill for the relief of William W. Danenhower, referring said bill to the Court of Claims.

The title of the resolution was read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this resolution be passed over for the present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I just want to call attention to a matter in this. I do not know whether it has been called to the attention of the committee or not. This is a resolution to refer to the Court of Claims a bill which provides for the payment for damages caused by the erection of the Union Station and the appurtenant works. We passed an act a number of years ago in reference to that matter, the act of June 29, 1906, amending a prior act of April 22, 1904, and several times since then we have passed special bills coming from the Committee on the District of Columbia. We have provided for a commission, as I recall, of some kind—a board of experts—to pass upon these matters, and provided that the claims should be made before that board within a certain time; and several times after that we passed special acts authorizing special persons to make their claims before this board. I suppose the board, or the commission, or whatever it was called, has long since ceased to exist. But in all these cases we only provided for the payment for damages to property, damages to real estate. This provides for damages caused by depreciation in value of the property. Possibly that refers to real estate. I suppose it does. It also provides for the loss of the use of the property and the destruction of the business conducted thereon. It goes a great deal further than we went with anybody else. Those who took advantage of the law and were prompt in making their claims were given only damages to the injury to their real estate. Of course we can not very well now, by special bills, start in to give damages for the business which was conducted there.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I agree most heartily with the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, and I favor an amendment along the lines suggested.

Mr. MANN. Of course you can not amend the resolution very well. A new bill should be introduced. I do not see any reason myself, if a man's property was damaged and he was not guilty of laches or negligence, why he might not be recompensed now if there was reason for his not making the claim at the time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Let me ask the gentleman a question for the purpose of getting information. The committee has substituted a resolution in lieu of the bill. Of course, as I understand it, that resolution carries the bill with it?

Mr. MANN. That resolution carries the bill with it; yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Then why could not the bill itself be amended?

Mr. MANN. The bill is not before us.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I understand; but I was asking, as I said, for information.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how that could be possible.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Could not the House by unanimous consent amend the bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it could. I would not say that the House could not amend the resolution so as to refer to the Court of Claims so much of the bill as referred to damages to real estate, for findings of fact and conclusions of law. I suppose that might be done.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I suggest that this resolution be passed over for a few minutes, and in the meantime it can be amended by its author.

Mr. MANN. The amendment would have to be to the resolution, not to the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is some difficulty, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, as to amending the resolution now before the House. I know nothing about the particular facts in the case, but it is represented to me that the claimant is desirous of getting his claim before the Court of Claims, and I am sure everyone is willing to allow him to have his day in court, so that he can set up his facts there. The bill was drawn so as to require the action of the Senate as well as the House in referring the claim to the Court of Claims. The Committee on Claims has brought in a House resolution under section 151 of the code, which was approved in 1911, proposing to refer it by way of a simple House resolution.

Now, my attention has been called to the fact that the claim, if referred in that manner, would not be considered by the Court of Claims, because it does not on its face seek to recover anything from the United States. In other words, it is not drawn in the form of a claim. The original bill is purely a matter of reference to the Court of Claims for the purpose of having it make a finding upon the law and facts. If it is in shape for amendment, I would not only like to accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman, but would like to offer a substitute for the original bill so as to put it in such form as will authorize the Court of Claims to consider it under a reference such as is proposed here.

I will say to the gentleman that my attention was called to the case of Cohalan against the United States, reported in Forty-second Court of Claims Reports, pages 280 to 282, which specifically holds that the Court of Claims will not take jurisdiction of a claim where it is referred under the Tucker Act unless the bill provides for the payment of a specific sum or shows upon its face that it is a claim against the United States Government. Now, unless in the opinion of the gentleman the original bill in the form in which it is presented here by the Committee on Claims can be amended by unanimous consent, the matter will have to go over and a new bill introduced.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it could be. I will say to the gentleman that I am inclined to think that possibly his remedy should be an entirely different one. I am not sure. If the gentleman will refer to Twenty-sixth Statutes at Large, pages 336, 581, 1344, and 1346, unless my note is wrong, he will find where we passed laws giving relief in just such cases as this, but not through the Court of Claims. Now, whether the remedy authorized there is gone entirely I do not know, but that referred it again to the original commission through the court, and when the action of the court was entered in those cases I think it was in the form of judgments. Of course this reference to the Court of Claims would only make a finding of facts and law, and would not be a judgment anyhow.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope something will be done with this bill, for the reason that the man has been out of the use of his property for the last 12 years, ever since this railroad was taken off the Mall here. He had a warehouse and was conducting a warehouse business, but on account of the running of several tracks in front of his place of business he has been unable to get access to his property and could not use it for anything.

Mr. MANN. Why did he not file a claim?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He has filed a claim, as I understand the matter, and it has been in Congress also.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether he has introduced bills, but there has been no bill reported.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand there has not.

Mr. MANN. But we passed the original Union Station act in 1903, and another in 1904, and amended it in 1906. This man had plenty of opportunity, as far as that is concerned. He can not lay any blame upon us. It is his own negligence, not ours.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That may be.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know whether he has filed any claim or not. It was simply presented to me as a matter of reference, and I thought that if he felt he had any claim he had a right to his day in court at least, and that Congress should take such action as would give it to him.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to know whether he has had his day in court. He may have filed a claim and received an award, or he may have been denied an award by the court originally. If so, he has very little claim for another special finding from another tribunal.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not in a position to advise the gentleman on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That this matter be passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PEABODY & STEARNS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13674) to amend section 11 of chapter 308 of the acts of 1909.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

REMAINS OF CHARLES H. BINGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15282) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Charles H. Bingham from the Congressional Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Lock Haven, Pa.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is on the Speaker's table or not, but there is a similar Senate bill, S. 5863. If we are going to pass this legislation, we ought to pass the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill H. R. 15282 was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the health officer of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Charles H. Bingham from Congressional Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Lock Haven, Pa.

With the following committee amendment:

After the word "Pennsylvania," in line 7, insert the following: "but such permit shall not be issued until there has been filed in the health department of the District of Columbia a permit from the proper governmental authorities at the place where said cemetery is located, authorizing the interment there of said remains."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TENNIE A. ANDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6267) to reimburse Tennie A. Anderson, postmaster at Maplewood, Fayette County, W. Va., for money, money orders, and postage stamps stolen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill says that it is to pay to Tennie A. Anderson, postmaster, the sum of $152.16, the same to be in payment for certain money, money orders, and postage stamps stolen. If somebody steals money from a postmaster, we do not pay him. I do not know what is meant by "money orders stolen."

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That should have been "money-order funds."

Mr. MANN. Then it should have been so amended by the committee. But what does it mean?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It was my oversight.

Mr. MANN. But we do not pay money to a postmaster because somebody has stolen money from him.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. This money, which belonged to the Government, was in this post office which was robbed. The postal authorities required the postmistress to make good the loss.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing said about that here. Is that what it is for? There is nothing to indicate that she ever paid the money.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. But it is the fact.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may know it of his own knowledge; he may remember about these things; but it is not stated in the report and not indicated in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I have a letter from the Postmaster General. She was required to pay this money for this reason——

Mr. MANN. I can understand that she might be required to pay the money, sometimes they are, or receive credit for it, but who ever drew the bill did not contemplate that she had paid the money.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The idea of the drafter of the bill was that it was to reimburse her, although it is not plainly stated in the bill, if it is stated at all.

Mr. MANN. The bill ought to be amended so as to state what it means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Tennie A. Anderson, postmaster at Maplewood, Fayette County, W. Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $152.16, the same to be in payment for certain money, money orders, and postage stamps stolen from the post office at Maplewood, Fayette County, W. Va., January 26, 1914.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 8, by striking out the word "orders" and insert the words "order fund."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 8, by striking out the word "orders" and insert the words "order fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 2, after the word "fourteen," insert "to reimburse her for money paid by her on her settlement with the postal authorities."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Was the word "money" stricken out in line 8? All she lost was the money-order fund and postage stamps.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 8, by striking out the word "money" where it first occurs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 8, page 1, by striking out the word "money" where it first occurs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN TRANSPORTATION CO., BALTIMORE, MD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15635) for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co., of Baltimore, Md.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim against the United States of the Eastern Transportation Co., of Baltimore, Md., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal place of business in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, owner of the barge John T. Donohue, for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said barge and the United States steamer C-2, in Chesapeake Bay, off Smiths Point, on the 28th day of March, 1913, may be sued for by the said Eastern Transportation Co. in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such a suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, interest, and costs, if any shall be found to be due, against the United States in favor of the said Eastern Transportation Co. upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That the amounts of the losses alleged to have been sustained by the master and crew of the barge John T. Donohue may be included in such decree.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding at the end of line 18, page 2, the following: "Provided, That said suit shall be commenced within four months from the date of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, by adding at the end of line 18, the following: "Provided, That said suit shall be commenced within four months from the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. MANN. That provision is in section 2, which I propose to move to strike out, but it is desirable to have the provision in. Section 2 makes an appropriation to pay the decree, which is not customary. These decrees or judgments, when entered, are certified to Congress as decrees or judgments of the Court of Claims, and they go into the general deficiency bill as a matter of course. That is the proper way to do it so that they can keep track of it. We never put in a provision in the same bill for the appropriation of the amount.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I think the gentleman is correct about that matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, strike out the word "interest."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 2 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That should damages, interest, and costs be found to be due the said Eastern Transportation Co., the amount of a final decree therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that section 2 be stricken out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD J. LYNCH.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 14814 was passed. That bill we passed and we have since found the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. What is the calendar number?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Two hundred and seventy-six. That bill was passed a few moments ago. We have found the Senate bill of similar title, and I want to vacate the proceedings and substitute the Senate bill. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill was passed and substitute in lieu thereof the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 14814, Calendar No. 276, and to vacate the proceedings by which the bill was passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. And to consider the Senate bill 5495.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Edward J. Lynch, collector of internal revenue for the district of Minnesota, and his accounts with the sum of $35,207.14½, being the value of currency, coin, and various kinds of stamps charged to him and which were stolen from the vault of his office during the night of January 6, 1916, together with other stamps which have since been returned him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the similar House bill, 14814, should be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill H. R. 14814 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

D. A. BARBOUR AND ANDREW P. GLADDEN.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 276, H. R. 11584. A similar Senate bill has just been found, and I ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill (S. 4368) in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to D. A. Barbour and Andrew P.

Gladden, copartners, of Clarksburg, W. Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $758, due said Barbour & Gladden for material furnished by them in the performance of a certain contract between said firm and the Quartermaster of the United States Army for repairing barracks and constructing bathhouse and closets at Fort Monroe, Va., in compliance with the findings of the Court of Claims reported to Congress February 26, 1907.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The bill H. R. 11584 was laid on the table.

JOHN M. WAPLES.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my objection to Calendar No. 268, H. R. 11749, for the relief of the heirs of John M. Waples.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his objection to the bill H. R. 11749. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of John M. Waples, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $130.43, which sum is hereby appropriated, the same being the amount of accrued pension due the deceased from June 4, 1915, until the day of his death, December 5, 1915.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "legal representatives" and insert the words "administrator of the estate."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the administrator of the estate of John M. Waples."

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is engaged in the committee room in the preparation of a revenue measure, and he asked me in his absence to ask unanimous consent that the Calendar for Unanimous Consent be called, beginning the call where we left off on the last call of that calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LLOYD). The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the Calendar for Unanimous Consent be called, beginning where it was left off on the last call. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to that. That will take but a few moments, but I think after we run through the Calendar for Unanimous Consent as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi, we might, if the gentleman desires, start at the beginning again, though probably there will be a great many bills that will be objected to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, there are one or two measures that the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who is now in St. Louis, is desirous of having taken up. They are not personal to myself at all, but some Members are very anxious about them, and I hope we may be allowed to take up those measures.

Mr. MANN. There are only a few bills that had not been on the calendar long enough the other day, and I suggest that we might commence at the beginning of the calendar if the gentleman desires.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Is it not a fact that we finished the calendar the other day?

Mr. MANN. We finished it as far as we could go, but bills are not called unless they have been on the calendar for three days.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. The gentleman understands what I want?

Mr. MANN. I think if we commence at the beginning we can get to the gentleman's bill, but I have no objection to the gentleman's asking unanimous consent to call up the bill especially.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is one bill on the calendar, No. 128, H. R. 11148, transferring the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western judicial district of the United States in the State of Oklahoma to the eastern judicial district of said court in said State for judicial purposes, to the consideration of which I have twice objected. This time I desire to have it taken off the calendar, and I have to go away, as I have an engagement at one of the departments at 2.30.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will take care of the gentleman's bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to object to it and get it off the calendar.

Mr. MANN. I will object to it at the gentleman's request. I know what the bill is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi that the Calendar for Unanimous Consent be now called, beginning where we left off the last time it was called?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC LANDS IN THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15156) granting public lands to the State of Oklahoma.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LLOYD). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROCEDURE IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9428) relating to procedure in United States courts.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 269 of the Judicial Code, approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"No judgment shall be set aside or reversed or a new trial granted by any court of the United States in any case, civil or criminal, on the ground of misdirection of the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless in the opinion of the court to which application is made, after an examination of the entire cause, it shall appear that the error complained of has injuriously affected the substantial rights of the parties."

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "or" and insert the words "nor shall," and page 1, line 8, after the word "trial" insert the word "be."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REFINED PRODUCTS OF PETROLEUM.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11623) to permit the use of certain refined products of petroleum as stores on steam vessels carrying passengers.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That kerosene and lubricating oils made from refined products of petroleum which will stand a fire test of not less than 300° F., may be used as stores on board steamers carrying passengers under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the enacting clause the following:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

SALARIES OF VETERINARY INSPECTORS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16060) providing for the classification of salaries of veterinary inspectors and lay inspectors (grades 1 and 2) employed in the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COX. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

IMPORTED MEXICAN PEAS.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is detained at present on business. I want some explanation of this bill and I ask to have it passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LANDS IN FLORIDA NATIONAL FORESTS.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3764) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Florida National Forests.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of consolidating the forest lands belonging to the United States within the Florida National Forest, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, upon the recommendation of the Department of Agriculture, to exchange lands belonging to the United States which are part of the Florida National Forest for privately owned lands of approximately equal value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, within the exterior limits of said national forest, which lands upon the consummation of the exchange shall become a part of the Florida National Forest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 7, by striking out the word "Department" and inserting the word "Secretary."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 7, by striking out the word "Department" and inserting the word "Secretary."

Mr. MANN. The language is "upon the recommendation of the Department of Agriculture." We do not use that term, but we say "Secretary of Agriculture."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE VIRUS, SERUM, AND TOXIN ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15914) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to license establishments for and to regulate the preparation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products for use in the treatment of domestic animals, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this bill accomplishes a very much needed purpose, but it seems to me that on its face there are a lot of provisions in it that are plainly unconstitutional and do not relate to interstate commerce in any way whatever. It is so important a matter it ought to be considered in the House.

The Committee on Agriculture will probably be reached before long on the call of committees, and that is when it ought to be considered. It is too important a matter to be passed by unanimous consent with the number of amendments which ought to be made to the bill to make it of any value, and therefore I am compelled to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

CLAIMS OF THE STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3346) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois allow the bill to go over without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. Certainly, I will let it go over without prejudice.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3346 may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All of these bills go over without prejudice.

Mr. DYER. No; this will go off the calendar if unanimous consent is not given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

There was some bill that was passed over.

Mr. MANN. No. It was only to keep its place on the calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We start now at the beginning of the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Not unless somebody makes that request.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we now return to the beginning of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent to return to the beginning of the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FRAUDULENT ENLISTMENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7619) to repeal section 3 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, enacted July 27, 1892.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if it is not already understood, I ask unanimous consent that during this call bills that are objected to will remain without prejudice on this calendar.

Mr. THOMPSON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, could not we ask individually that these bills be passed over and remain on the calendar so as not to wipe them all off in the absence of the authors of the bills? Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not know what this bill is, but I was thinking about it generally.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object, although the next time we call the Unanimous Consent Calendar in the regular order I am going to make it short enough to know where we are on that calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that during these convention weeks we would not resort to that drastic means.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the request is that bills which are objected to remain on the calendar, I shall object to that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] will not object. I understand what his bill is.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that the bills that may be objected to may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether or not the calling of this Unanimous Consent Calendar takes the place of unanimous-consent day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands it does not.

Mr. MANN. It does not, but it is contemplated that we may devote Monday to the consideration of one of the appropriation bills instead of the Unanimous Consent Calendar in view of the fact that it will be run through to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. It is not a very good day to call for the regular order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not see any necessity for all this discussion.

Mr. MANN. If other people do, they have as much right to their opinion as the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The bills can come up in their order, and it seems to me if any gentleman wants to object to a bill he can do it any time it comes up.

Mr. MANN. Nobody was objecting to it except when the time came.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understood that there was a motion that if any of them were objected to, they would be passed without prejudice. I could not see any necessity for it.

Mr. MANN. Here is the consideration. I am not going to have these bills remain on the calendar and have the request made to each bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. MANN. Was that arrangement made?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That consent was granted to the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 722) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the Senate joint resolution 60, creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MANN. I object.

AVIATION SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the Senate joint resolution 65, creating a joint commission of Congress to be known as the Joint Commission of Congress to Investigate the Aviation Service of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12365) to promote the reclamation of arid lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when in any State of the United States under the irrigation district laws of said State there has heretofore been organized and created, or shall hereafter be organized and created, any irrigation district for the purpose of irrigating the lands situated within said irrigation district, and in which irrigation district so created or to be created there shall be included any of the public lands of the United States, all such public lands so situated in said irrigation district, when subject to entry, and all entered lands within said irrigation district, for which no final certificates have been issued, are hereby made and declared to be subject to all the provisions of the laws of the State in which such lands shall be situated relating to the organization, government, and regulation of irrigation districts for the reclamation and irrigation of arid lands for agricultural purposes, to the same extent and in the same manner in which the lands of a like character held under private ownership are or may be subject to said laws: Provided, That the United States and all persons legally holding unpatented lands under entry made under the public-land laws of the United States are accorded all the rights, privileges, benefits, and exemptions given by said State laws to persons holding lands of a like character under private ownership, except as hereinafter otherwise provided: Provided further, That this act shall not apply to any irrigation district comprising a majority acreage of unentered land.

SEC. 2. That the cost of constructing, acquiring, purchasing, or maintaining the canals, ditches, reservoirs, reservoir sites, water, water right, rights of way, or other property incurred in connection with any irrigation project under said irrigation district laws shall be equitably apportioned among all lands held under private ownership, all lands legally covered by unpatented entries, and all unentered public lands included in said irrigation district. Officially certified lists of the amounts of charges assessed against the smallest legal subdivision of said lands shall be furnished to the register and receiver of the land district within which the lands affected are located as soon as such charges are assessed; but nothing in this act shall be construed as creating any obligation against the United States to pay any of said charges, assessments, or debts incurred.

That all charges legally assessed shall be a lien upon all unentered lands and upon lands covered by unpatented entries included in said irrigation district; and said lien upon said land covered by unpatented entries may be enforced upon said unpatented lands by the sale thereof in the same manner and under the same proceeding whereby said assessments are enforced against lands held under private ownership: Provided, That in the case of entered unpatented lands the title or interest which such irrigation district may convey by tax sale, tax deed, or as a result of any tax proceeding shall be subject to the following conditions and limitations: If such unpatented land be withdrawn under the act of Congress of June 17, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 388), known as the reclamation act, or subject to the provisions of said act, then the interest which the district may convey by such tax proceedings or tax deed shall be subject to a prior lien reserved to the United States for all the unpaid charges authorized by the said act of June 17, 1902, but the holder of such tax deed or tax title resulting from such district tax shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges in the land included in such tax title or tax deed of an assignee under the provisions of the act of Congress of June 23, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 592), and upon submission to the United States land office of the district in which the land is located of satisfactory proof of such tax title, the name of the holder thereof shall be indorsed upon the records of such land office as entitled to the rights of one holding a complete and valid assignment under the said act of June 23, 1910, and such person may at any time thereafter receive patent upon submitting satisfactory proof of the reclamation and irrigation required by the said act of Congress of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereto, and making the payments required by said acts.

SEC. 3. That no unentered lands and no entered lands for which no final certificates have been issued shall be subject to the lien or liens herein contemplated until there shall have been submitted by said irrigation district to the Secretary of the Interior, and approved by him, a map or plat of said district and sufficient detailed engineering data to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior the sufficiency of the water supply and the feasibility of the project, and which shall explain the plan or mode of irrigation in those irrigation districts where the irrigation works have not been constructed, and which plan shall be sufficient to thoroughly irrigate and reclaim said land and prepare it to raise ordinary agricultural crops, and which shall also show the source of water to be used for irrigation of land included in said district: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, upon the expiration of 10 years from the date of his approval of said map and plan of any irrigation district, release from the lien authorized by this act any unentered land or lands upon which final certificate has not issued, for which irrigation works have not been constructed and water of such district made available for the land: Provided further, That in those irrigation districts already organized and whose irrigation works have been constructed and are in operation as soon as a satisfactory map, plat, and plan shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, as in this act provided, such entered and unentered lands shall be subject to all district taxes and assessments theretofore actually levied against the lands in said district and in the same manner in which lands of a like character held under private ownership are subject to liens and assessments.

SEC. 4. That upon the approval of the district map or plat as hereinabove provided by the Secretary of the Interior the register and receiver will note said approval upon their records where any unentered or entered and unpatented lands are affected.

SEC. 5. That no public lands which were unentered at the time any tax or assessment was levied against same by such irrigation district shall be sold for such taxes or assessments, but such tax or assessment shall be and continue a lien upon such lands, and not more than 160 acres of such land shall be entered by any one person; and when such lands shall be applied for, after said approval by the Secretary of the Interior, under the homestead or desert-land laws of the United States the applicant shall be required to present with his application therefor a certificate from the proper district or county officer showing that no unpaid district charges are due and delinquent against said land.

SEC. 6. That any entered but unpatened lands not subject to the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), sold in the manner and for the purposes mentioned in this act may be patented to the purchaser thereof or his assignee at any time after the expiration of the period of redemption allowed by law under which it may have been sold (no redemption having been made) upon the payment to the receiver of the local land office of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or such other price as may be fixed by law for such lands, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entries of like lands under the homestead laws, and upon a satisfactory showing that the irrigation works have been constructed and that water of the district is available for such land; but the purchaser or his assignee shall, at the time of application for patent, have the qualification of a homestead entryman or desert-land entryman, and not more than 160 acres of said land shall be patented to any one purchaser under the provisions of this act.

These limitations shall not apply to sales to irrigation districts, but shall apply to purchasers from such irrigation districts of such land bid in by said district.

That unless the purchaser or his assignee of such lands shall, within 90 days after the time for redemption has expired, pay to the proper receiver all fees and commissions and the purchase price to which the United States shall be entitled as provided for in this act, any person having the qualification of a homestead entryman or a desert-land entryman may pay to the proper receiver, for not more than 160 acres of said lands, for which payment has not been made, the unpaid purchase price, fees, and commissions to which the United States may be entitled; and upon satisfactory proof that he has paid to the purchaser at the tax sale, or his assignee, or to the proper officer of the district for such purchaser or for the district, as the case may be, the sum for which the land was sold at sale for irrigation district charges or bid in by the district at such sale, and in addition thereto the interest and penalties on the amount bid at the rate allowed by law, shall be subrogated to the rights of such purchaser to receive patent for said land.

In any case where any tract of entered land lying within such approved irrigation district shall become vacant by relinquishment or cancellation for any cause, any subsequent applicant therefor shall be required, in addition to the qualifications and requirements otherwise provided, to furnish satisfactory proof by certificate from the proper district or county officer that he has paid all charges then due to the district upon said land and also has paid to the proper district or county officer for the holder or holders of any tax certificates, delinquency certificates, or other proper evidence of purchase at tax sale the amount for which the said land was sold at tax sale, together with the interest and penalties thereon provided by law.

SEC. 7. That all notices required by the irrigation district laws mentioned in this act shall, as soon as such notices are issued, be delivered to the register and receiver of the proper land office in cases where unpatented lands are affected thereby, and to the entryman whose unpatented lands are included therein, and the United States, and such entryman shall be given the same rights to be heard by petition, answer, remonstrance, appeal, or otherwise as are given to persons holding lands in private ownership, and all entrymen shall be given the same rights of redemption as are given to the owners of lands held in private ownership.

SEC. 8. That all moneys derived by the United States from the sale of public lands herein referred to shall be paid into such funds and applied as heretofore provided by law for the disposal of the proceeds from the sale of public lands.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 25, by striking out the word "hereinabove" and inserting "hereinbefore," and, on page 9, line 10, by striking out the word "heretofore."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: Page 1, lines 10 and 11, strike out the word "all," and, on page 2, on lines 21 and 22, strike out the word "all" where it appears, and, on page 3, line 7, strike out the word "all."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to prevent parties from attempting to load upon public lands that are not irrigable charges assessed under district irrigation laws. It is not necessary to use the word "all" in this connection. If we bring the public lands under these districts that would come under them if they were private lands, to wit, those which are benfited; that is quite sufficient. As a matter of fact, within the boundaries of every irrigation district there are some lands that are not benefited at all by the work, because they are rocky or rough or broken or above the level of the ditches, and no authority should be given to include that class of land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I quite agree with the gentleman from Wyoming, and the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is not the slightest difference in the effect between saying "all public lands" and "public lands" or "such public lands," and there is not the slightest difference between saying "persons" and "all persons" when you refer to a class. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. That may all be, but I prefer to have the distinction made.

Mr. MANN. But the purpose the gentleman seeks to accomplish will not be accomplished by his amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it will at least serve notice upon people to proceed in good faith. It will not leave an opening for those who endeavor to use this law for an improper purpose. It will serve notice upon them that we do not intend to include all public lands, but such as will be benefited. I think there is a difference between public lands that may properly be brought within a certain project and all public lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 13, after the word "issued," insert "which may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior in the approval by him of the map and plat of an irrigation district, as provided in section 3."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this first section brings public lands under the irrigation district, and would make them subject to charges.

Now, section 3 of the bill provides for the examination of the project by the Secretary of the Interior, and I presume that it was in the mind of those who drafted the bill that at the time the Secretary examined the project and the map and plans he would indicate the public lands within the boundaries of the district upon which charges could be laid. But I think it is better to make it clear that the only public lands within the district which we bring under the district and liable to charges are those which the Secretary himself designates when he goes over the maps and plans. They will be the lands that may be benefited.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He naturally would not bring in a lot of worthless mountains as land. I thought the idea of the amendment was already in. I think it is proper.

Mr. MONDELL. I think we should make it clear that no other public lands should be included in the district than those that will be irrigated and therefore benefited.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment on page 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Page 6, strike out line 13 and the word "therefor" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Application shall be suspended for a period of 30 days to enable the applicant to present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OVERISSUES OF SECURITIES BY CARRIERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 563) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, several gentlemen have indicated to me that they desire to be present when the bill is considered, and they are absent to-day. Therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

WESTERN AND EASTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11148) transferring the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western judicial district of the United States court, in the State of Oklahoma, to the eastern judicial district of said court in said State, for judicial purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

STREAMS, SPRINGS, AND WATER HOLES ON PUBLIC LANDS, CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

CERTAIN LANDS TO TOWN OF MYTON, UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 35) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Myton, Utah.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill went over the other day to enable the gentleman from Utah to obtain certain information.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, this bill went over to give me the opportunity to get certain information which the gentleman from Illinois desired, as to the number of acres to be sold to the town of Myton. I have here a statement from the Commissioner of the General Land Office setting forth the exact number of acres included in all of the lands described. This statement may be read into the RECORD, if the gentleman desires, which I insert:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, June 8, 1916.

Hon. JAMES H. MAYS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MAYS: Answering your phone message of yesterday, you are informed that the aggregate area of land sought to be conveyed by Senate bill 35 to Myton, Utah, is 224.91 acres, which sum is derived from the plat of the town site approved by this office September 13, 1905.

Very respectfully,
C. M. BRUCE,
Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman make a statement as to the number of acres that there are.

Mr. MAYS. There are 224.91 acres altogether.

Mr. MANN. With that amount of acreage, is there any reason why this town should not pay for the land?

Mr. MAYS. Not at all. I propose that we insert an amendment in the Senate bill, in line 4, page 1, after the word "authorized," to insert the words "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre."

Mr. MANN. All right, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYS. I offer that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MAYS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue patents to the town of Myton, Utah, for the following-described lands, as shown by the plats and records on file with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of said town: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, section 19, township 3 south, range 1 west, to be used as the site of a pumping station; the south half of the northwest quarter section 30, township 3 south, range 1 west, for cemetery purposes; the north half of the northwest quarter, section 30, township 3 south, range 1 west, Uinta base and meridian, to be used as a reservoir site and for other purposes incidental thereto in the distribution of water to the inhabitants of said town; blocks 36 and 46 of town site of Myton, to be used and held for the benefit of the public schools of said town; all that portion of unsubdivided block 1 which lies west of the Duchesne River, to be used as a public common; and all those portions of blocks 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, and 10 which lie east and north of the Duchesne River, to be used as a public park: Provided, That if the said town shall at any time permit the said lands hereby granted to be used for any purposes not contemplated by this act the said lands shall revert to the United States.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, on page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," I move to insert the words "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," insert the words "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAYS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12999) extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," approved August 23, 1912.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

MARCUS A. JORDAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 888) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to confer upon Marcus A. Jordan the life-saving medal of the first class.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Has the gentleman investigated this particular case?

Mr. MANN. I have acquired what little information there is in the report.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman understands, of course, that there is a statute which provides for the bestowing of these medals. Now, I understand that this young man—who, by the way, is a namesake of our friend and everybody's friend, Hon. MARCUS AURELIUS SMITH, now a Senator and for a long time a Delegate in this House from Arizona—was on a touring vessel in the Java Sea. A lady fell overboard, and he very gallantly rescued her. My understanding of the law is that the Secretary of the Treasury could have granted him this medal except for the fact that the rescue took place in foreign waters and from a foreign vessel. It seems to me that if anybody is entitled to the medal, this young man is. I am told that these waters were infested with sharks, and that it was a very brave and heroic act. I hope my friend from Illinois will not object to this. The bill has passed the Senate. The matter has been thoroughly investigated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is a general law on the subject in reference to the granting of life-saving medals for the saving of life at sea. There is also another law in reference to the granting of medals for saving life on railroads. The latter I put through Congress when I was a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That committee has jurisdiction of these matters. The Committee on the Library has never exercised jurisdiction heretofore, although this bill was referred to the Committee on the Library, and that committee had the authority to report it back.

During my term of service on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce there were a great many bills introduced for the purpose of granting, by special act of Congress, life-saving medals to various individuals who did not come within the terms of the general law. Unless I am mistaken in my recollection, no such bill was ever passed while I was a member of that committee, and that covered a great many years. If we had opened the door and had passed one bill of this kind, we would have been requested to pass 100 or 200 bills a year in cases where somebody had saved somebody's life, where a most commendable act had been performed, which did not come within the terms of the general law. I am not willing to open that door if I can help it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, the only difference is the fact that this young man happened to be upon a foreign vessel and in foreign waters. It is my understanding that if it had been an American ship in American waters the Secretary could have bestowed the medal.

Mr. MANN. I can give the gentleman one instance where possibly I was wrong about what I did. A great many years ago a man, who afterwards became a bishop in the Methodist Church, while a student at Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., at the risk of his own life, under much more arduous conditions than those of this case, went out into Lake Michigan in one of the storms, with other people, and rescued a lot of passengers. He did not get the life-saving medal. The whole Methodist Church at one time bore down on me, not because they knew anything about the case but because of the friendly touch. I have got lots of mighty good Methodists in my district, and they were active to get that bill passed. Even the distinguished Speaker at that time asked me if I would not let the bill pass. I could not do it by unanimous consent. I am not willing, if I can help it, that Congress shall go into the business of judging whether the thousands of people throughout the country who perform heroic acts at different times shall be awarded special medals of honor by congressional action, when it is not possible for us to know the circumstances and we have to take the statement of somebody else. We have to take somebody's account of it. I have no objection to this young man. He jumped overboard to save somebody's life, but thousands of people have done the same.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman concede that we do not know anything except what we get from other people? We have to take the word of somebody.

Mr. MANN. That is true, but by the very nature of things we are not fitted to pass on such questions of fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in connection with my remarks on the Senate bill, to print in the RECORD chapter 83 of the Laws of the United States, approved January 23, 1897.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the law referred to:

Whereas the Attorney General, under date of January 30, 1895, has rendered an opinion that the statutes authorizing the award of life-saving medals apply to the rescue of those persons only who, in the vicinity of a life-saving station, lifeboat station, or house of refuge, are in danger of drowning in any of the waters over which the United States, by reason of their right to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, have jurisdiction, and that the purpose of such statutes is to cause such medals to be bestowed upon the members, whether regular or volunteer, and whether permanent or temporary, of the life-saving crews; and that the terms "succoring the shipwrecked" and "saving persons from drowning," employed in section 12, act approved June 18, 1878, authorizing the bestowal of life-saving medals of the second class, were intended to embrace only those persons who were suffering from the perils of the sea, either by actual shipwreck or from being upon or connected with any vessel in distress: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., (1) That so much of the acts relating to life-saving stations and the Life-Saving Service approved June 20, 1874, June 18, 1878, and May 4, 1882, as provide for the award of life-saving medals shall be construed so as to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to bestow such medals upon persons making signal exertions in rescuing and succoring the shipwrecked and saving persons from drowning in the waters over which the United States has jurisdiction, whether the said persons making such exertions were or were not members of a life-saving crew, or whether or not such exertions were made in the vicinity of a life-saving station.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY OF LAND IN WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3132) providing for the homestead entry of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands in abandoned military reservations numbered 23 and 24, described as follows: Lots 1 and 2 in section 5 and lot 3 in section 6, of township 20 north; and the southwest quarter, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and lots 3 and 4 of section 21; and the northwest quarter, the west half of the northeast quarter, lots 1, 2, and 3, and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 28; and the south half of lot 3 and all of lots 4 and 5, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 31; the south half of the south half of the northwest quarter, the south half of the south half of the northeast quarter, and lots 1 and 2 and the west half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter and the southwest quarter of section 32; and the south half of lot 2 and all of lot 3 of section 33, in township 21 north, all in range 2 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington, or any part thereof, to be regularly surveyed or subdivided into tracts or lots of 20 acres each, more or less, to conform as nearly as practicable to the existing local survey.

SEC. 2. That after said survey and the approval thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register and receiver in the manner provided by law, and thereafter any settler who was in actual occupation of any portion of the lands described in section 1 hereof on the 1st day of January, 1910, who made actual settlement thereon in good faith for the purpose of securing a home, and who has since maintained his claim thereto, or any successor in occupation and interest of such settler, shall, if qualified to make a homestead entry, be entitled to make a homestead entry of the lands so occupied, not exceeding 20 acres in a body, according to the Government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon payment to the Government at the time of such entry of the sum of $2.50 per acre for each acre entered by him, and within five years from the date of such entry he shall be required to submit proof showing residence and cultivation of such lands in the manner and for the length of time required by the homestead laws of the United States, and failure to make such showing shall be deemed sufficient cause for forfeiture of all rights to the land and to the money paid, and in case of any such default the land shall be offered at public sale.

SEC. 3. That the following-described land, being a part of abandoned military reservation No. 24, is hereby granted to school district No. 71, of Pierce County, State of Washington, to wit: The east half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 32 in township 21 of range 2 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington, upon payment therefor to the United States of $2.50 per acre.

SEC. 4. That if any of the lands described in section 1 hereof be not duly entered as a homestead by some settler, as provided in section 1 of this act, within 90 days after the same becomes subject to entry under the provisions of this act, then, in that event, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of such remaining lands under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 5, 1884, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out, on page 2, section 2, beginning with the word "successor," in line 20, the rest of the section, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "one who has since said date succeeded to the occupation and interest of any such prior settler, his heirs or assigns, shall be entitled to purchase the lands so occupied, not exceeding 20 acres to each settler, according to the Government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon payment to the Government of a sum equal to the amount of the appraised valuation of the same; said appraisal to be made under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in accordance with regulations to be approved by him: Provided, That in making such appraisal no account shall be taken of roads, wharves, or other general improvements in connection with said lands, nor of any improvements made thereon, but the same shall be appraised as nearly as may be as they were at the time when first settled upon: And provided further, That payment to the Government may be made in one sum or one-tenth cash and the balance in nine equal annual installments, with interest at 4 per cent per annum, as the purchaser may elect."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of line 5, page 4, the following: "Provided further, That any purchaser under the provisions in this section shall not hereafter have the right to make a homestead entry."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Amend section 4 by striking out the section and inserting a new section 4, reading as follows:

"SEC. 4. That if application to purchase any of the lands described in section 1 hereof be not filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office within one year after the approval of regulations for purchase, then, in that event, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of such remaining lands under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 5, 1884, entitled 'An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment, on page 5, line 1, by inserting, after the word "office," the following: "under the provisions of section 2 hereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "office," insert the words "under the provisions of section 2 hereof."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendments as amended were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL PARK AT GETTYSBURG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 13342, to improve and maintain certain public roads and parts thereof included within the limits of the national park at Gettysburg, as defined by the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a national military park at Gettysburg, Pa.," approved February 11, 1895, and making an appropriation therefor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have that bill passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

DAMS ACROSS NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 3331, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If unanimous consent should be given for the consideration of this bill now, it not being regular unanimous-consent day, would not that consent continue until the bill was disposed of?

Mr. ADAMSON. Let us take the chances on it and go ahead and see.

Mr. MANN. Would not the consent continue until it was disposed of?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will frankly say that he does not know.

Mr. MANN. It probably would not be disposed of short of two weeks.

Mr. ADAMSON. It might.

Mr. MANN. It is a certainty that it is the most hotly contested proposition that there is floating around Congress.

Mr. ADAMSON. It has to be considered sometime.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to considering the bill if gentlemen really think they want to dispose of this bill before they take up the appropriation bills or anything else of that kind.

Mr. ADAMSON. It has to be considered sometime, and I regard it as one of the most important bills that has been in Congress since I have been serving here.

Mr. MANN. Yes. The gentleman has reported a substitute striking out every word, line, and punctuation mark in the original bill and inserting a new bill which shows its importance.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is mistaken. The substitute bill reported is the original bill substantially as once passed by this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman himself will not object, which he ought to do——

Mr. ADAMSON. No; I want to consider the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is bluffing, pure and simple.

Mr. ADAMSON. Suppose the gentleman calls my bluff.

Mr. MANN. I feel some responsibility in connection with the business of the House, even though I am not one of the majority.

Mr. ADAMSON. The House could not do any better business than to take up this bill and pass it.

Mr. MANN. If we should take up this bill now by unanimous consent I should say that it is a certain thing that we would not get away from here until toward October, and I have some hope—some hope, not very much, on account of the procrastination on the Democratic side—that it might be possible for us to get away from here by the middle of August. Therefore, I object.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, knowing that we are safe anyway, I am perfectly willing to stay here and transact business. There is no trouble about beating the other side in the election.

Mr. MANN. That is more bluff.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill goes over.

CUTTERS FOR THE COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2719) providing for the purchase or construction of cutters for the Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

VESSELS IN LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14340) to furnish all seagoing vessels in the Lighthouse Service and all other seagoing vessels of the Department of Commerce with radio equipment and auxiliary power for the operation thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my handsome, accomplished, able, and distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] what would be accomplished by this bill except merely making an appropriation? Do not the authorities now have power when they get this money to put this wireless equipment upon the vessels in the Lighthouse Service?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold a few of his objections and recur to his customary amiability, I will apply to him all of the good things that he has just now said about me, and in answer to his question I desire to say that the best way to show what the result will be will be to consider the bill and pass it.

Mr. MANN. I know; but that is hardly an answer to the question. Here is the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, presided over by the most amiable Member of this House, for whom I have a great affection and admiration, and the rules specifically provide that that committee shall not have jurisdiction over appropriations, and the only thing there is in the bill is an item making an appropriation of some money.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there are few things in the world that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not know, and it is so seldom that he makes a misstatement that for that reason whenever he does do so through inadvertence it is a great regret to me to have to correct him. The rule does not specifically prescribe any such thing. The rule simply prohibits the committee from appropriating for two particular purposes, namely, life saving, lighthouses and lightships, and that is all. It can appropriate for anything else of which it has jurisdiction, but it does not do it, because it does not consider it polite to interfere with what is claimed to be the prerogative of the Committee on Appropriations. Answering the gentleman's first question, the Secretary of Commerce came before the committee and earnestly pleaded for this bill. We reported the bill because we think that what he asked for ought to be done. If passing the bill here does not result in supplying him with the necessary money to do the thing that is necessary to do, we can not help it. We do refrain from making appropriations in most cases, although the gentleman is mistaken in saying that the rule prohibits us from making them.

Mr. MANN. Let us see about that. The gentleman chides me for making a mistake, as he says——

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, no; I do not chide the gentleman, I simply regret to correct him.

Mr. MANN. He says the only things the rule prohibits his committee from making appropriations for are lighthouses and lighthouse vessels. I do not remember exactly what the rule is; I am taking the gentleman's statement——

Mr. ADAMSON. Let us get the book.

Mr. MANN. And I am glad that he is going to refresh his recollection. Having stated that the rule prohibits him from making appropriations for lighthouse vessels, he proceeds to bring in a bill for that very thing, making an appropriation to equip lighthouse vessels with a radio service. It does not make any difference what the rule reads. The rule is that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has no jurisdiction to make appropriations.

I was a member of the gentleman's committee for 14 years, and the gentleman has been a member of the committee for 20 years—this is his 20th year—and there never before was reported from that committee a bill for the sole purpose of making an appropriation during that length of service.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not say the sole purpose of this bill is to make an appropriation. The sole purpose of this bill is to have the radio provided, and the purpose of this bill is not to build lightships, but to put radio service on ships already constructed.

Mr. MANN. That is part of a lightship.

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. It is part of the ship. This appropriation says it authorizes the radio service, but they have that authority now. The only thing they lack is money. They will put them on when they get the money. We had the radio service on light vessels of the Lighthouse Service, and whenever they can not work the Committee on Appropriations into giving them sufficient money, then they try to work the committee of my genial, distinguished, able, handsome, and beloved friend from Georgia. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Which gentleman?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is that most of these vessels, that are large enough to carry the wireless apparatus without tipping over, have already been provided for.

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, the Secretary does not so state. Of course, I had to take some information from the department; I do not know it all as an original proposition.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, while my friend is looking up the rules, having stated and proved to the House that in this particular instance I was mistaken, I am going to read the rule for his benefit.

Mr. ADAMSON. Here is the rule; I have it before me.

Mr. MANN. But it took the gentleman a long time to find it and it took me about a second, and the gentleman has had the book in his hand for about 20 minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON (reading)—

To this committee shall be referred all bills relating to commerce, the Life-Saving Service, and lighthouses, other than appropriations for the Life-Saving Service and lighthouses.

That is the rule, and this is not the Life-Saving Service nor a lighthouse.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, it says:

To this committee shall be referred all matters relating to commerce, the Life-Saving Service, and lighthouses.

The only jurisdiction the gentleman's committee gets over this bill is because it has jurisdiction over matters relating to lighthouses. Then the rule provides—other than appropriations for the Life-Saving Service and lighthouses.

If that does not clearly say that the gentleman's committee does not have jurisdiction over certain matters I will eat my hat——

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know——

Mr. MANN (continuing). And that is not good eating.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know how such a diet will agree with the gentleman. I think perhaps the beauty of the performance is in the extravagance of the gentleman's language in this particular. The rule emphatically states our committee has jurisdiction over these things except appropriations for two purposes. The committee has often made appropriations. We provided an appropriation of $140,000,000 for the Panama Canal. We did that, and we procured appropriations in many instances, for one, a health bill last week, and the Aqueduct Bridge bill; but, to return to my first statement, the best answer to the gentleman's question is to let us pass the bill and see what the effect will be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS ON THE COAST OF GEORGIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6903) providing for the establishment of life-saving stations on Tybee Island, coast of Chatham County; on Warsaw Island, coast of Chatham County; on Ossabaw Island, coast of Bryan County; on St. Catherines Island, coast of Liberty County; on Blackbeard Island and on Sapelo Island, coasts of McIntosh County, all in the State of Georgia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be established life-saving stations at the places hereinafter designated, to wit: Tybee Island, coast of Chatham County; on Warsaw Island, coast of Chatham County; on Ossabaw Island, coast of Bryan County; on St. Catherines Island, coast of Liberty County; on Blackbeard Island and on Sapelo Island, coasts of McIntosh County, all in the State of Georgia; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby required to provide for such establishments and supply the same with the necessary life-saving crews, equipment, and furnishings as provided by law in such cases.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 4, page 2, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Georgia in the vicinity of Tybee Island, at such point as the captain commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend, and the station shall be manned during the entire year."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out of the committee amendment the language "and the station shall be manned during the entire year."

Mr. ADAMSON. Why does the gentleman offer that amendment?

Mr. MANN. In one moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, by striking out of line 9 the words "and the station shall be manned during the entire year."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, most of the life-saving stations are not manned during the entire year. The months of July and August on the Atlantic coast, as a rule, do not have the life-saving stations open, and there is no special occasion for their being open. I do not know whether this station ought to be open the entire year or not.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit a statement——

Mr. MANN. The Secretary has power to keep them open if he so desires.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will give the gentleman the reason in this case.

Mr. MANN. Where the Secretary has power and discretion I do not think we ought to take away by legislation that discretion from the department to determine whether these stations ought to be kept open or not.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then, the gentleman's reason is that he would prefer to leave it to the discretion of the department?

Mr. MANN. I think they would have that discretion.

Mr. ADAMSON. Not being certain of that, we thought we ought to provide this, because Tybee Island is a celebrated watering place, frequented by throngs of people during the very months when the other stations are not usually kept open.

Mr. MANN. I know it is their duty, and they do it all along at the bathing beaches, to provide life guards of their own. We do not provide life-saving stations for the benefit of Atlantic City and these other places along there, purely. We provide life-saving stations only for the benefit of shipping, and these people hire their own life guards, and they can well afford to do it at every bathing beach I have visited, and I have visited several of them.

Mr. ADAMSON. Admitting it is true, and admitting it is every man's duty to behave and take care of himself, yet it is not always done, and there is work for the public to do to supplement what human nature does not do, or ought to do, or fails to do, or can not do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will readily see that if we start in to provide life-saving service during the bathing season all along the Atlantic coast, we will have quite a job on our hands. It will be a very expensive proposition. We have never undertaken that, and I do not think we ought to do it in a particular place.

Mr. ADAMSON. This institution does not extend all up and down the Atlantic coast. It is about the finest thing on the coast, and during these summer months there is danger and there are casualties down there during those months. It does not cost any more to say or recommend that it shall remain open all the year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Would it not answer if we inserted that life-savers be there only during the months of July and August?

Mr. ADAMSON. Savannah, Ga., is one of the greatest shipping ports. Some storms come there even in that mild climate. I think it ought to remain open all the year.

Mr. WALSH. Is there no life-saving station in that vicinity?

Mr. ADAMSON. Not for several hundred miles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 8.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Georgia if his line of reasoning would not require the life-saving station at Coney Island to be open all the summer, and whether he thinks it is the duty of the Representative from that district, who does not happen to be myself, to introduce a bill to keep that station open all summer? More people visit that station in 15 minutes in the summer than visit Tybee Island all the year around.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am not as familiar with Coney Island as I am with Tybee Island, and I gather from the question that the gentleman is not familiar with it. According to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois just now there are enough folks around there to save people from the water, anyhow.

Mr. BENNET. Some of the people that go down there do not worry about water.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think the insertion of the words "Coney Island" would be a germane amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read as follows: "A bill to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station in the vicinity of Tybee Island, coast of Georgia."

COAST GUARD STATION, BARATARIA BAY, LA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12282) to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Louisiana in the vicinity of Barataria Bay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Louisiana if there is any need of this life-saving station?

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. There is very serious need, I will say to the gentleman, and I was very serious when I tried to explain that fact the other day.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not have much time the other day, but we do have time today.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I will say that Grand Island, as I have explained, is at the uttermost point in the Gulf of Mexico in that neighborhood. There are about 1,000 people in that vicinity, about 500 on the island, and about 500 others on some other adjacent islands engaged in the shrimp and fishing business. Storms frequently come up there without warning, and within the last 10 or 12 years, as I can recall, there have been some very serious disasters, loss of life and loss of property. Only last September there was quite a considerable loss of life in that neighborhood. The gentleman asked me the other day if it were possible that the waves washed across that island. I will state positively the Gulf of Mexico sweeps across Grand Island frequently up to a depth of some 6 or 10 feet. I have seen the evidences of such a flood on the buildings down there frequently.

Mr. MANN. Is this station to be located on Grand Island?

Mr. DUPRÉ. In the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, I should say. It is in the vicinity of Barataria Bay. Grand Island is the largest of a group of islands in that neighborhood. I should be glad to accept an amendment such as the gentleman tendered to the Tybee Island bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill the Senate bill 4085, on the same subject, which is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose the gentleman means to consider the Senate bill in lieu of this bill. I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the Senate bill read first. Let us have it reported, if it is there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understood we got consent to consider this one.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4085) to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Louisiana, in the vicinity of Barataria Bay.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Louisiana, in the vicinity of Barataria Bay, at such point as the Captain Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend, and the station shall be manned during the entire year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the words "and the stations shall be manned during the entire year."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words, in lines 6 and 7, "and the stations shall be manned during the entire year."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OR CONSTRUCTION OF CUTTERS FOR COAST GUARD.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 515) providing for the purchase or construction of cutters for the Coast Guard.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is a powerful good bill. I am sorry the gentleman objects.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman report two bills on the same subject on the same day?

Mr. ADAMSON. I am perfectly willing to compromise with the gentleman on either.

Mr. MANN. Then that will not be the first time the gentleman and I have compromised.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is easy to compromise with the gentleman when he is right. We can then agree in the nicest way. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION, LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14338) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago said, "Why consider this House bill when there is a Senate bill on the calendar?" I notice we have passed over the Senate bill. I am willing to go back and pass it if the gentleman is willing.

Mr. MANN. I knew we passed over it. I wondered why the gentleman was anxious to consider the House bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman was anxious to consider the Senate bill. I am sorry that such an amiable man should make so many objections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO EMPLOYEES IN NAVY YARDS, ETC.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11168) granting 30 days' leave of absence in each year, without forfeiture of pay during leave, to employees at United States navy yards, gun factories, naval stations, and arsenals.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. That is not the right bill. When the bridge bills were called, those bills were passed over. The Senate bill and the House bill were passed over.

Mr. ADAMSON. Are those the ones that were passed yesterday?

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The title of the bill was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that bill be passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WAGE SCALE IN NAVY AND WAR DEPARTMENTS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9548) to regulate the wages of certain employees employed in or under the Navy and War Departments of the Government.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COX. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that objection a moment?

Mr. COX. Yes; I will withhold the objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman understand that that bill does not add any expense, and simply changes the investigation from one force to another?

Mr. COX. I have read the gentleman's bill, if it is his bill, and I have read the report. I am not sure whether it adds anything to the expense or not, but I am not caring very much about that point. I do not think it right to let any department of this Government go into private enterprises and find out what they are paying their employees and then make that information public property. I am not willing to let a bill of that kind pass by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman, then, wants to protect the private manufacturers.

Mr. COX. I just object to the consideration of a bill of this kind by unanimous consent.

BRIDGE NEAR CEDAR POINT AND DAUPHIN ISLANDS, ALA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11616) to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges or viaducts across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands, as amended by an act approved June 18, 1912.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I ask that this bill and the next one, S. 4476, be passed over temporarily.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understood there was some objection to the length of time allowed in the bill, and the Alabama Members were endeavoring to agree. I hope that if they agree, on account of their magnitude and importance we will be able to get them up later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the bills H. R. 11616 and S. 4476 be temporarily passed over. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

HEROES OF THE TITANIC.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 104) granting permission to the Woman's Titanic Memorial Association to erect a memorial on public ground in the city of Washington.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

BRIDGE NEAR CEDAR POINT AND DAUPHIN ISLANDS, ALA.

Mr. MANN. I will be glad now to return to the Unanimous Consent Calendar 188, Senate bill 4476.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course, if we are going to consider either, it is better to consider the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Yes; return to the Senate bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask, then, that the Senate bill be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill in its present form would, I think, extend for five years the time for commencing this work. I do not know whether the bridges have been commenced or not. The original act was passed in 1910. Then in 1912 we passed an act very similar to this, extending the time in the way in which it is extended in this bill, which is not a very good way, to September 18, 1916. I have prepared an amendment by way of a substitute for this bill, which I submit to the gentleman, extending the time directly one and three years for commencing and completing the bridge, or I would be willing, if necessary, to make it one and four years. It is probably a big bridge.

Mr. ADAMSON. Would not the gentleman be willing to make it two and four years?

Mr. MANN. They have had seven years now in which to commence this bridge. It may have been commenced.

Mr. ADAMSON. They have made explanations of their financial difficulties, and I myself know something of the character of those difficulties. The gentleman knows that it is a mammoth undertaking to build a bridge and dredge the channel, and when they get their finances ready the job is done. Really the beginning is a very important item in the time.

Mr. MANN. Their authority to dredge the channel and all that has expired long since. This does not pretend to extend that. I do not know whether they ever did the work or not. I have not been able to find out.

Mr. ADAMSON. What are the dates in the amendment that the committee reported?

Mr. MANN. Nineteen hundred and twenty-one, I believe.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think if the gentleman would consent to two and four years, they could get along with that.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will accept that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the request?

Mr. MANN. I will send up the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is my request.

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill is on the calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is next on the calendar. Instead of calling up the House bill I ask that that be omitted and that the Clerk report the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the bill S. 4476.

Mr. MANN. I offer a substitute to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"That the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by the act entitled 'An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands,' approved June 18, 1912, is hereby extended to two years and four years, respectively, from and after the 18th day of September, 1916."

Mr. ADAMSON. I am willing to agree to that amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, when was the original act passed?

Mr. MANN. The original act was passed in 1910.

Mr. BENNET. And the amendatory act?

Mr. MANN. In 1912.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "An act extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by an act entitled 'An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands' approved June 18, 1912."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the corresponding House bill H. R. 11616 was ordered to lie on the table.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN NATIONAL PARKS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6814) to exclude intoxicating liquors from national parks and national forest reserves.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I object.

ELECTRIC RAILWAY ON FORT BARRANCAS AND FORT M'REE MILITARY RESERVATIONS, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3344) to authorize George H. Hervey, of Pensacola, Fla., to construct and operate an electric railway line on the Fort Barrancas and Fort McRee Military Reservations, Fla., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. If it is proper at this time, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. There is no information in this report to show the reason for this. The report of the distinguished former Secretary of War is—

I beg leave to advise you that the department will offer no objection to the passage of the proposed bill, but it is suggested that the bill as drafted be amended by substituting for the word "reservation," in in line 6, the word "reservatiens," and by inserting after the word "Barrancas," in the same line, the words "and Fort McRee."

Now, that is valuable information to furnish to Congress as the reason for passing the bill, but that is all we have before us.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. That is merely to correct what was an error. Fort McRee lies west of Fort Barrancas and immediately adjoining it. There is an electric line running from Pensacola to Fort Barrancas with a terminus immediately in front of Fort Barrancas, which, in part, crosses the military reservation, and is owned by the Pensacola Electric Co. This bill gives the right to Hervey to extend the electric line from its terminus of the Pensacola electric line now in front of Fort Barrancas down to a point near where, I think, it is contemplated that they expect to put up a summer hotel. I can not see any objection to it, and, in fact, it would be a benefit to the Government in time of necessity.

Mr. MANN. Does this man Hervey own the railroad?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. He does not; the Pensacola Electric Co. owns it; it owns the line that runs from Pensacola to Fort Barrancas.

Mr. MANN. Suppose Mr. Hervey should die.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. I hope he will not.

Mr. MANN. He will after a while. That is one of the things that is almost certain. Some time he will die, and, according to this bill, when he is dead nobody would have authority to run the road.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. I would be glad to accept an amendment which would obviate that unfortunate situation.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that this bill was to remedy some defect in previous legislation.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Not at all; the gentleman is thinking of the two following bills.

Mr. MANN. No; I am thinking about what the gentleman from Florida has just said.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. I will say, that if I said anything to indicate that, it was an inadvertence. The Pensacola Electric Co. owns the electric line from Pensacola to Fort Barrancas and the navy yard. This electric line runs over the military reservation now to a point immediately opposite the officers' quarters at Fort Barrancas. It is desired to give Mr. Hervey, who owns one of the best hotels in the South in Pensacola, authority to extend the line, if he can, to a point farther down on the Gulf coast and there build a kind of summer hotel.

Mr. MANN. What he wants, as I understand, being a hotel man, is instead of conveying his guests over the Florida sands by wagon he wishes to take them by rail.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Precisely.

Mr. MANN. This seems to give not much limitation. If there is no electric franchise or anything of that sort, there ought to be a provision that would allow the Secretary of War to vacate this authority whenever he thought it was necessary. I think if Mr. Hervey is going to build this line, he would want the words "heirs, successors, or assigns" put in, so that if anything happened to him they would still have a right to operate the road.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. That is a pertinent suggestion, undoubtedly, and I will offer an amendment to that effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I have not prepared an amendment. While it is under such regulations as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of War, where we practically retain no control except the power to repeal, ought to have authority to put this road off the military reservation if the Government wants to take possession of the land.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. I would be perfectly willing to have it amended to that effect. I think the Secretary of War could do it, anyway, in time of stress.

Mr. MANN. We could take it, but we would have to pay for it.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. I will accept an amendment to that effect if the gentleman will offer it. It is an absolutely harmless proposition. We do not ask anything from the Government, but this road is already on the military reservation, owned by a private corporation, and this bill permits Mr. Hervey to extend it 2 or 3 miles down the coast.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the present condition of the road is on the military reservation; but this is a very wide opening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the United States is hereby given to George H. Hervey, of Pensacola, Fla., to locate, construct, maintain, and operate a line of electric railway on the military reservations of Fort Barrancas and Fort McRee, in Escambia County, State of Florida, upon such location and under such regulations and conditions as shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill so that the first part of it will read as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to give to George H. Hervey, his heirs, successors, and assigns, a permit to locate, etc.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 3 and 4, page 1, down to the word "locate" and insert the following: "That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to give to George H. Hervey, his heirs, successors, and assigns, a permit to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILSON of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

PROPERTY AT PENSACOLA, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 3581, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to that portion of land, being a fractional block, bounded on the north and east by Bayou Cadet, on the west by Cevallos Street, and on the south by Intendencia Street, in the old city of Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, there are two of these bills. These are the bills the gentleman referred to the other day when he stated that the abstract of titles showed that these people had been in possession over 100 years.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. They and their grantors have been in possession 110 years.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like to say that we have had these bills up several times before the committee and they have passed either branch of Congress once or twice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say further that if the committee had reported that information in the report these bills would have been passed before, but because of the insufficiency of the report they have been held up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent, remissing, releasing, and quitclaiming forever all right, title, claim, and interest of the United States of America in and to that portion of land, being a fractional block, bounded on the north and east by Bayou Cadet, on the west by Cevallos Street, and on the south by Intendencia Street, in the old city of Pensacola, in the county of Escambia and the State of Florida, to such person or persons, firms or corporations as shall make proof that he himself, or he and his grantor or grantors, has had continuous possession thereof under claim of ownership during the last 20 years next before the passage of this act. Such patent, however, shall be subject to any public easement or other adverse right suffered or granted by the patentee or his grantors.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry. Of course, I consider Florida more or less as a home, and I am fond of it; but how do they spell the word "remising" in Florida?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I was about to offer an amendment correcting the spelling of that word.

Mr. MANN. I would not have thought of it if it had appeared in just one of the bills, but it is in both of them.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 4, by striking out the word "remissing" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "remising."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILSON of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOT 306, PENSACOLA, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3580) releasing the claim of the United States Government to lot No. 306 in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILSON] if there was any explanation given why the occupants of this land, if they were the predecessors in apparent title of the present occupants, did not take advantage of the act of February 28, 1824, or the act of 1822?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. That is a long time ago, and I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET. Was there any explanation made before the committee?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. No; there was not. This is to remove a cloud on the title. These people have been in possession of this land, as I stated a moment ago, for 110 years—these people and their predecessors in title. It is in the heart of the city of Pensacola, and no objection has ever been raised, except that the cloud exists, and people will not buy land on which there is a cloud.

Mr. BENNET. Does the gentleman mean that this property has passed by conveyance and descent?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Ever since 1806.

Mr. BENNET. And this is simply to clear up an old cloud on the title?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Exactly.

Mr. BENNET. And there is really no interest of the United States Government in it at all?

Mr. WILSON of Florida. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent remissing, releasing, and quitclaiming forever all right, title, claim, and interest of the United States of America in and to lot No. 306 in the old city of Pensacola, in the county of Escambia and the State of Florida, to such person or persons, firms or corporations, as shall make proof that he himself, or he and his grantor or grantors, has had continuous possession thereof under claim of ownership during the last 20 years next before the passage of this act. Such patent, however, shall be subject to any public easement or other adverse right suffered or granted by the patentee or his grantor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the word "remissing" in line 4 be stricken out and the word "remising" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILSON of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENDING TIME TO SETTLERS IN NEW MEXICO, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6430) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, June 27, 1898, and February 26, 1909.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether there have been any claims presented or offered since 1910 that would be covered by this bill?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. There are several in my county that I know of.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that there are claims?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the report to indicate that anybody has ever had any claim at any time, or that any claim has ever been presented or offered in any way, or that there is any occasion for the bill. Here is a law that has been extended four or five times in order to give people additional time, and I am frank to say that I think if there are people who want to avail themselves of it we might properly give them the opportunity.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I think so.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing here to indicate that anybody wants to come in under the bill.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. GANDY. I might say that I was informed by the General Land Office prior to the time that action was taken by the committee that there are some claims pending.

Mr. MANN. That information does not appear in the report, and I did not know what the facts might be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of an act entitled "An act to establish a Court of Private Land Claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by the act approved February 21, 1893, and by the act approved June 27, 1898, and by the act approved February 26, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, further amended by striking out the words "before the 4th day of March, 1910," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "before the 4th day of March, 1915," so that the first clause of said section shall read as follows, namely:

"That all claims arising under either of the two next preceding sections of this act shall be filed with the surveyor general of the proper State or Territory before the 4th day of March, 1917, and no claim not so filed shall be valid."

Provided, That the extension herein granted shall not apply to lands within the limits of a confirmed grant or embraced in any entry completed under the public land laws prior to filing of a claim hereunder, nor shall its provision extend to persons holding under assignments made after March 3, 1901.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "seventeen."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERNANDEZ, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN SETTLERS UNDER THE YUMA RECLAMATION PROJECT, ARIZONA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10116) for the relief of certain settlers under reclamation projects.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the purpose of this bill to legalize certain unlawful entries upon the Yuma reclamation project, where perhaps the people were not fully advised of the law, or perhaps they did that to play a sneak on the Government?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I would call it "unlawful," but probably "unauthorized" entries at that time.

Mr. MANN. Well, the law specifically prohibited it, did it not?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, it may have done so at that time; I do not know.

Mr. MANN. I know it may have been, but the gentleman is informed, and does not the gentleman know that the law did specifically prohibit people entering upon this land the way they did?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, I do not know about this particular case. I did not report the bill, but I know under some of these projects they have been encouraged to go on and settle, and they do acquire a kind of incipient prior right, you might say, that the department afterwards recognized, because they sometimes think it is going to be opened and they do not drive them off, and they go on and make improvements there and try to make a home.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman know they specifically prohibited people from entering upon reclamation lands in cases like this?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; I think that is true, but nevertheless there are——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman does not know whether that is the case or not, I wonder if he knows the law sufficiently to properly pass upon this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. As I say, it is not my bill; I did not report it, but I know the committee considered it and I know it was the impression of the Interior Department that there were equities in this particular case that warranted the passage of this measure and that these people should not be considered as willful trespassers.

Mr. MANN. Well, the original bill covered all reclamation projects, and the committee report in a bill covering the Yuma project. I have been unable to find any report from the department that urged the passage of this bill. However, they say possibly the people were ignorant, but I do not know. How many cases are there in this Yuma project, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, I do not know, but my impression is there are not a great many. It speaks here of 13 settlers in one place, and says:

According to information furnished by the Department of the Interior, the enactment of this bill as amended will enable 13 settlers, who have heretofore made application to enter an aggregate area of 840 acres of withdrawn land, to make entry—

And so forth.

Mr. MANN. It makes a very bad precedent in order to give something to 13 men who deliberately violated the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has heretofore established residence upon and improved any tract of land within the irrigable area of a reclamation project withdrawn from entry under the provisions of the reclamation law and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, and who shall have made bona fide improvements upon such land, and who have resided thereon in good faith for two years prior to the passage of this act, may make entry for the farm unit upon which his residence is established, notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to authorize advances to the reclamation fund," and so forth, and acts amendatory thereof; and the homestead entry of any entryman who has heretofore established residence upon any such tract of land and who shall have resided thereon in good faith for two years prior to the passage of this act and who has placed bona fide improvements thereon is hereby validated.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 9, on page 2, and insert the following:

"That any person who has heretofore established residence upon and improved any tract of land within the irrigable area of the Yuma reclamation project in Arizona, withdrawn from entry under the provisions of the reclamation law and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, and who shall have made valuable improvements upon such lands, and who has resided thereon in good faith for two years prior to the passage of this act, may make entry for the farm unit upon which his residence is established, and that such residence and improvements heretofore made shall be credited upon his final proof."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJUSTMENT OF RIGHTS OF SETTLERS ON THE NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10115) authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on the Moqui and Navajo Indian Reservations in the State of Arizona.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FEDERAL AID FOR INDIGENT TUBERCULOUS PERSONS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11864) to provide Federal aid in caring for indigent tuberculous persons, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TOWN SITE OF NEWELL, S. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12889) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands to the town of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reserve and set apart such portions of the unsold and unappropriated lands within the town site of Newell, Butte County, S. Dak., as he deems necessary for administrative purposes in connection with the Belle Fourche irrigation project, and after subdividing the remaining portions of such lands into tracts that in his judgment would render the same most salable, and, appraising the reasonable value of each such tracts, sell the same, for not less than the appraised value, at public auction to the highest bidder, on such terms and under such rules and regulations as he may establish.

SEC. 2. That the proceeds of such sale, after deducting all expenses incurred in the subdivision, appraisement, and sale of said land, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, in a special fund, available only for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, to provide the said town of Newell, Butte County, S. Dak., an adequate system of water supply for domestic purposes, under such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, or for such other and further public improvements as the Secretary of the Interior and the municipal authorities of said town may agree upon.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I move that section 2 be amended to read as follows——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman offers it as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. GANDY. As an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That of the proceeds of such sales, after deducting all expenses incurred in the subdivision, appraisement, and sale of said lands, an amount not exceeding $15,000 shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States in a special fund and available only for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior to provide or assist in providing the said town of Newell, Butte County, S. Dak., an adequate system of water supply for domestic purposes, under such terms and conditions as may be provided by the Secretary of the Interior, or for such other and further public improvements as the Secretary of the Interior and the municipal authorities of said town may agree upon. The net proceeds of such sale in excess of $15,000, if any there be, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States and credited to the reclamation fund in accordance with existing law for the sale of town sites on reclamation projects.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portion of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. GANDY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COPYRIGHT LAW.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13981) to amend the copyright law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whoever has the bill in charge a few questions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has anybody charge of this bill?

Mr. CARY. If not, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Hans Isenberg, of Lihue, county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii, his associates, successors, and assigns, or such corporation as he or they shall cause to be incorporated under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii (he and they being hereinafter referred to as the "association"), be, and hereby are, vested with the right, authority, and privilege for the term of 50 years from and after the date of the approval of this act by the Congress of the United States to manufacture, sell, furnish, and supply electric light, electric current, or electric power in the Lihue district and the Koloa district, county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii, for lighting the streets, roads, public or private buildings, or for motive power, or for any other purpose which they may deem advisable, and from time to time for said term of 50 years, for the purposes herein mentioned, to construct, maintain, and operate suitable poles, lines, wires, cables, lamps, lamp-posts, conductors, conduits, and such other appliances and appurtenances as may from time to time be necessary for the transmission, distribution, or supply of electricity to consumers thereof under, along, upon, and over the streets, sidewalks, roads, squares, bridges, alleys, and lanes in the Lihue district and the Koloa district, county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii, and to connect, by means of the said line, wires, and conductors, any manufactory, private or public buildings, lamps, lamp-posts, or other structure or object with the place of supply.

SEC. 2. That all poles, lines, wires, cables, lamps, lamp-posts, conductors, conduits, and other appliances constructed, maintained, or operated under, along, upon, or over the streets, sidewalks, roads, squares, bridges, alleys, and lanes in the said Lihue district and the said Koloa district shall be so constructed, maintained, and operated by the association as to not unnecessarily interfere with the use of such streets, sidewalks, roads, squares, bridges, alleys, and lanes by the public.

SEC. 3. That said association, its representatives, successors, and assigns, shall be responsible for any damages either to person or property reulting from any act of negligence on its part which may occur by reason of the exercise of any of the privileges herein granted.

SEC. 4. That if said association, its representatives, successors, and assigns, shall fail or refuse to do or perform or comply with any of the provisions of this act or the laws of the Territory of Hawaii, and continues to refuse or fail to perform or comply therewith after reasonable notice given by the Public Utilities Commission of the Territory of Hawaii to comply therewith, said Public Utilities Commission of the Territory of Hawaii may, with the consent of the governor and of the attorney general, cause proceedings to be instituted before any appropriate tribunal to have the franchise hereby granted and all rights and privileges accruing hereunder forfeited and declared null and void, and in case of a forfeiture of this franchise the Territory of Hawaii, the county of Kauai, or any political subdivision thereof shall have the right to purchase all the property of the association within the said Lihue district and the said Koloa district at the value thereof, such value to be determined as provided in section 16 hereof: Provided, That notice of such desire and intention to purchase is given to the association by the Territory of Hawaii or the county of Kauai or any political subdivision thereof within 60 days after the forfeiture of this franchise.

SEC. 5. That the association shall have the right to maintain, operate, and use electric meters or other means of measuring electric light, power, or current supply from time to time and to locate the same at such places as may be deemed necessary for its protection. That such association shall have the right to charge, receive, and collect from all consumers of electricity such reasonable prices as may from time to time be fixed and determined by the association, but such charge shall not at any time exceed 20 cents per kilowatt hour, or 1,000 watt hours, nor exceed such rate or rates as may be fixed from time to time by the Public Utilities Commission of the Territory of Hawaii: Provided, however, That the association shall have the right to charge, receive, and collect from each consumer of electricity for light the sum of not exceeding $2 per month and from each consumer of electricity for power the sum of not exceeding $1 per month for 1-horsepower apparatus connected to the service of the association: And provided further, That should electricity be required of said association by the Territory of Hawaii, or the county of Kauai, or any successor of either, or of any political subdivision thereof, for public purposes, said association shall not charge therefor more than 10 cents per kilowatt hour, or 1,000 watt hours: And provided further, That this franchise and the association holding the same shall be subject, as to reasonableness of rates, prices, and charges, and in all other respects, to the provisions of chapter 128 of the Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1915, creating a public-utilities commission, and all amendments thereof, for the regulation of the public utilities in said Territory, reserving, however, to said association the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of Hawaii from every order of said commission as provided in said chapter.

and labor necessary to be used in making such connections, the reasonableness of said charges upon the application of any party in interest to be subject to the approval of the public-utilities commission: Provided, however, That the association shall not be required to make, construct, or maintain said connections as aforesaid or supply light or power unless the applicant or applicants for such light or power, if required, shall deposit in advance with the association a sum of money sufficient to pay one-half of the costs and expenses of making and constructing such connections and for current for a period of one month in advance.

SEC. 7. That the association shall not be required to extend, construct, or maintain its main lines beyond a distance of 300 feet unless there be an applicant for each 300 feet of extension, or fraction thereof, and unless each applicant shall, in addition to the other requirements in this act provided, agree to take, install, and maintain five 40-watt lamps or 1 horsepower of power apparatus for not less than one year.

SEC. 8. That the association shall have the right to discontinue or cut off the supply of electricity to any consumer who shall refuse to pay the amount due for electricity supplied by said association within such reasonable time as said association may fix for the payment of the same, and such discontinuance of service or supply of electricity shall not be a bar to or prejudice the rights of the association in any remedy or remedies now or which may hereafter be authorized by law for the recovery and collection of the amount due.

SEC. 9. That the board of supervisors of the county of Kauai is hereby authorized to make and from time to time change, amend, or add to reasonable rules regulating the placing of poles and wires, the insulation of wires and apparatus carrying electric current, and the maintenance in good repair of all poles, wires, and apparatus, and generally concerning the manufacture and supply of electricity which may be necessary or proper for the public safety and welfare. If at any time the association, after reasonable notice given to it in writing shall fail to observe or execute the rules and regulations hereinabove provided for relative to the placing of poles and wires, the insulation of wires and apparatus carrying electric current, and the repair of all poles and appliances, the board of supervisors of the county of Kauai, after giving the association reasonable notice thereof in writing of its intention so to do, may proceed to remedy such repair, and the cost of such repairs or charges may be recovered from the association by the county of Kauai.

SEC. 10. That the entire plant, corporation, books, and accounts of the association shall at all times be subject to the inspection of the Public Utilities Commission of the Territory of Hawaii and of the board of supervisors of the county of Kauai or other officer appointed by either of them for that purpose.

SEC. 11. That the association shall, within one month after the expiration of each calendar year, file with the treasurer of the county of Kauai a detailed statement showing all of its receipts and expenditures during the preceding calendar year, and shall, at the time, pay to the treasurer of the county of Kauai, for and on behalf of said county, one-half of 1 per cent of the gross receipts of the association from all electric light or power furnished to consumers during the preceding year; and all its books, papers, records, and accounts shall at all reasonable times be open to inspection by the treasurer of said county, and his respective agents appointed for such purpose.

SEC. 12. That said association shall have the right to acquire, hold, or take over, either by purchase or lease, property, both real, personal or mixed, and such other property as may be deemed necessary or essential for the proper conduct of its business. Said association and the directors thereof shall, however, not have the right to purchase franchises or property of whatever nature of, nor shares of stock in, nor bonds of, another company or corporation of like nature operating in the Lihue district and Koloa district, county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii.

SEC. 13. That the said association, whenever from time to time it shall deem it expedient in the furtherance of the objects of the association, shall have the power to borrow money and secure the payment thereof, with interest agreed upon, by mortgage of all or any part of its property and the franchise and privilege granted or obtained by virtue of this act; or, if it be deemed advisable, bonds may be issued, secured by deed of trust of such property as aforesaid, not to exceed 60 per cent of the actual value thereof, together with all future acquired property, as well as the income and receipts of the property from whatever sources derived, and in such form and under such terms as said association may deem advisable: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall operate to prevent said association from obtaining the usual business credits or making promissory notes without security: And provided further, That the association shall not issue stock in excess of the amount paid to it in cash, nor shall issue bonds at less than 90 per cent of their par value; and the entire proceeds of its stock and bonds shall be applied to capital expenditures. No member of the association, or any assignee or successor of the same, and no stockholder or officer thereof shall become interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract made by the association, its assignees or successors, in the construction of any part of the works.

SEC. 14. It is further provided that the right hereby granted shall cease and determine if operations hereunder are not commenced by beginning the construction of buildings or other works for manufacturing or supplying electric light and power, or by placing poles and wiring the same, or constructing conduits and laying wires therein in any of the streets, roads, or other places for the purpose of conducting electric light and power, within one year from and after the date of approval of this act by the Congress of the United States, and also if sufficient works are not completed and in operation to supply electric light and power, and if electric light and power is not supplied within one year after such commencement.

SEC. 15. That this franchise may at any time be amended or repealed by the Congress of the United States or by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, with the approval of the Congress of the United States, and the right, privileges, and powers by this act conferred shall not be construed to be exclusive.

SEC. 16. That the Territory of Hawaii, the county of Kauai, or any political subdivision thereof, may at any time after the expiration of 20 years from the date of the passage of this act by the Congress of the United States, and upon six months' notice in writing to the association, given pursuant to proper authority, when so authorized by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, acquire by purchase all the property of the association, subject to the then existing charges thereon. The amount to be paid to the association for such purchase shall be determined by a commission of three persons, one to be appointed by the association, or, in case it should fail to do so within 30 days after having been requested to do so by the purchaser, then by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii, one by the purchaser, and the third by the two so appointed; or, in case they should fail to agree upon the third member within 30 days, then by said chief justice, any such action by the chief justice to be taken only after giving to each party notice and an opportunity to be heard; but such amount shall in no case exceed the actual cost or the actual value of the tangible property or the actual cost of reproducing or replacing it, less depreciation and less the charges thereon. The value of the franchise or good will or any other intangible element shall not be considered in determining the amount to be paid.

Either the association or the purchaser may appeal to the Supreme Court of Hawaii from the decision of such commission by filing a written notice of appeal with the commission within five days after the decision is rendered. It shall thereupon be the duty of the commission immediately to certify up to the supreme court the record of its proceedings, showing in such certificate the valuation claimed by the association, the valuation claimed by the purchaser, and the valuation as determined by the commission. Such certificate shall be accompanied by copies of all papers, documents, and evidence upon which the decision of the commission was based and a copy of such decision. Upon any such appeal the supreme court may in its behalf take or require further evidence to be introduced by either party.

Within six months after the determination of the purchase price as aforesaid the same shall be paid to the association, and thereupon the franchise granted hereby shall cease and determine, and all the property of said association shall become the property of such purchaser without any further conveyance; but said association shall make all such further conveyances as may be desired by the purchaser and approved by said commission or said court on appeal.

SEC. 17. That this act shall take effect and be law from and after the date of its approval by the governor of the Territory of Hawaii, subject, however, to the approval of the Congress of the United States.

The association shall not issue stock in excess of the amount paid to it therefor in cash, nor shall it issue bonds at less than 90 per cent of their par value; and the entire proceeds of its stock and bonds shall be applied to capital expenditure.

No member of the association, or any assignee or successor of the same, and no stockholder or officer thereof shall become interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract made by the association, its assignees or successors, for the construction of any part of the work.

SEC. 12. This franchise may at any time be amended or repealed by the Congress of the United States or by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, with the approval of the Congress of the United States; and the rights, privileges, and powers by this act conferred shall not be construed to be exclusive.

SEC. 13. The Territory of Hawaii, the county of Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, within or including the district of South Hilo, may at any time after the expiration of 20 years from the date of the passage of this act by the Congress of the United States, and upon 6 months' notice in writing to the association, given pursuant to proper authority, when so authorized by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, acquire by purchase all the property of the association, subject to the then existing charges thereon.

Upon any such appeal the supreme court may in its behalf take or require further evidence to be introduced by either party.

Within six months after the determination of the purchase price as aforesaid the same shall be paid to the association, and thereupon the franchise granted hereby shall cease and determine, and all the property of said association shall become the property of such purchaser without any further conveyance; but said association shall make all such further conveyances as may be desired by the purchaser and approved by said commission or said court on appeal.

SATURDAY, June 17, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast set before us the ideal in the life and character of the man Christ Jesus and hast filled our souls with longings, hopes, and aspirations, help us, we beseech Thee, to attain by walking humbly before Thee, by dealing justly and honorably with all men, and by keeping ourselves unspotted from the world. "With malice toward none and charity for all." For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the platform adopted by the Democratic national convention at St. Louis on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the Democratic platform. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COURT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the House yesterday passed a bill, H. R. 6430, in relation to the establishment of a court of private land claims. There was a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's table. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 1840 and consider it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 1840, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, June 27, 1898, and February 26, 1909. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by the act approved February 21, 1893, and by the act approved June 27, 1898, and by the act approved February 26, 1909, be and the same is hereby, further amended by striking out the words "before the 4th day of March, 1910," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "before the 4th day of March, 1917," so that the first clause of said section section shall read as follows, namely:

"That all claims arising under either of the two next preceding sections of this act shall be filed with the surveyor general of the proper State or Territory before the 4th day of March, 1917, and no claim not so filed shall be valid."

Provided, That the extension herein granted shall not apply to lands within the limits of a confirmed grant or embraced in any entry completed under the public land laws prior to filing of a claim hereunder, nor shall its provision extend to persons holding under assignments made after March 3, 1901.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk suggests that on page 2 of the Senate bill, in lines 6 and 7, the word "section" occurs twice in immediate conjunction. One of the words ought to be stricken out.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend by striking out the word "section," in line 7, on page 2 of the Senate bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 6430 was passed, and that the bill lie on the table.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from the Baltimore Sun of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the Baltimore Sun. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15775, the pension appropriation bill, and pending that motion I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if he cares to enter into an agreement as to general debate?

Mr. CANNON. I have some requests for time on this side. It occurs to me that we had better talk a little while, and if it runs too long, then an agreement can either be made or general debate may be closed. There is no disposition on this side to delay the passage of the bill beyond the day. For the present, I suggest that we let general debate run without limit.

Mr. RAUCH. Very well; I am satisfied to proceed in that manner.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CLINE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15775) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to consume any time at present myself, except to make a short statement as to the amount carried in the bill and a provision directing the expenditure of certain money in the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries, in round numbers, $158,000,000 for the payment of pensions. I am thoroughly satisfied with the bill. While it is slightly under the estimates submitted, I believe it is sufficient to care for the service for the next fiscal year. There is a provision in it that probably would be subject to a point of order, but it would evidently be better to agree to it. I will not discuss it, for gentlemen will discover it when we come to read it.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries a very large amount of money, but it is decreasing from year to year. Gentlemen are aware that it increased after the passage of the age-service bill, passed practically under the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD. Deaths of the veterans of the Civil War are increasing, and decreasing the number on the pension rolls, and they will very rapidly decrease in the years immediately in front of us.

I have a letter here from the Commissioner of Pensions. In order to save time to myself in examining tables, I asked him for certain information, which I desire to call to the attention of the House. I sent the Commissioner of Pensions a letter and then paid him a personal visit for further information. I shall not read my letter. His answer to my letter I will read. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, June 16, 1916.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CANNON: I have your request, per your letter of the 6th instant, for information concerning pensions, as follows:

First. The average annual value of pensions under the first laws enacted after the Civil War (General Laws) or the average value of pensions previous to the act of June 27, 1890.

Second. The average annual value of pensions from 1890 to the enactment of the Sherwood law (act of May 11, 1912).

Third. The average annual value of pensions at the present time.

Fourth. The average age of pensioners before the act of 1890, thereafter to the enactment of the Sherwood law, and at the present time.

Fifth. The present death rate as to pensioners of all classes, and, as to widow classes, separately.

In response I have the honor to advise you that the average annual value of each pension for the periods specified is found to be as follows:

1. Fiscal years 1862 to 1889, inclusive, $109.16.
2. Fiscal years 1890 to 1912, inclusive, $150.58.
3. Present time (fiscal year 1915), $215.43.
4. The average age of pensioners living and on the roll at any given time in said periods or at present can not be furnished, as pensioners' ages are not shown on the pension roll, and no tabulations of pensioners by their ages has ever been made, so far as can be ascertained, except in connection with the claims filed by survivors of the Mexican and Civil Wars under the act of May 11, 1912, in the first year after its passage, taking in the fiscal year 1913. The average age of the Mexican and Civil War survivors on the roll and claiming pension under the act of May 11, 1912, in that period (fiscal year 1913) was found to be 70.7 years.
5. On July 1, 1915, the total number of pensioners of all classes on the roll was 748,147. In the 11 months that have transpired since that date the losses by death have been 50,857, an average of 4,623 per month, or about 6.8 per cent of the roll. At the same rate for the remaining month of the fiscal year the loss to the roll by death would be 55,480 or 7.4 per cent of the number on the roll at the beginning of the year

Of the 11 months' death loss of 50,857, as above noted, 18,310 or about 36 per cent were of the widow classes, and of said number of widow pensioners of all classes lost to the roll by death, 17,344, or 34 per cent of the total, were pensioned as widows of Civil War soldiers.

I also append hereto, in compliance with your verbal request, a table showing the total cost of pensions by wars from the foundation of the Government to the close of the last fiscal year, as follows:

War of the Revolution (estimated)	$70,000,000.00
War of 1812 (service pension)	45,972,895.76
Indian wars (service pension)	13,315,227.19
War with Mexico (service pension)	49,618,948.68
Civil War	4,614,643,267.43
War with Spain and Philippine insurrection	49,944,441.84
Regular Establishment	35,472,408.77
Unclassified	16,508,447.41
Total	4,895,475,637.08

Very truly, yours,

E. C. TIEMAN,
Acting Commissioner.

A large sum—nearly five thousand millions of dollars paid to the soldiers of the Civil War, their widows and dependents; and yet the magnitude should not surprise us because it was a great struggle and the pensions were worthily paid. Mind you, when a man goes into the Army he can not get out during his term of enlistment unless by discharge for disability or by purchase in time of peace, and it is exceedingly difficult to purchase discharge in time of war from the Army and the Navy. He is on the danger line. I once before, in speaking of this matter, spoke of the great waste that there was of human life under our military system. Some one corrected me when I said that as near as I could ascertain one-half of the disabilities in the war for the Union were incurred before the soldiers were prepared to fight. It was said that it was more than that. It may be more than that, but notwithstanding this great loss and sacrifice of human life, while I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, yet I believe that in the future, whatever you may think or I may think about it, the principal reliance will be upon the citizen soldiery of this great Republic, and therefore it is proper that when disability comes from disease or wound, or when death comes, the family of the soldier should be cared for within proper bounds.

You will notice that the pensions which I have just given you, while in the aggregate amounting to a very great sum, on the average are quite small. Two hundred and fifteen dollars a year is the maximum, and that runs down to $150 and to $109 a year for a minimum. Pensions to the citizen soldiery should be regarded from two standpoints, one from the standpoint of simple justice in God's chancery to care for those who bear the heat and burden of the day in battle, and another, equally important, from the standpoint of the future, that when the citizen is called upon to serve his country he will go with the feeling that if death or disease comes the great Republic will care for him and his within proper bounds.

We had a war with Spain, and about $50,000,000 in pensions have already been paid to the soldiers of that war. The soldier is pensionable if he had 90 days' service and if he was disabled. It is a disability pension up to this time for the soldier in that war, and the amount paid for those disabilities, as I said a moment ago, amount in the aggregate now to about $50,000,000. When thinking of these sums, vast in the aggregate, we should consider the growth of the country since the close of the great civil struggle. The population of the great Republic has been multiplied since that time by substantially three. The wealth of the country has been multiplied very much, growing from less than twenty billions up to two hundred billions. The railways of the country have grown from 31,000 miles to 260,000 miles plus. The unorganized territory has been organized into State. There has been great activity, great prosperity, and the per capita wealth of the United States is greater than that of any nation upon the earth; and in this connection I might be permitted to call the attention of our friends from the northern Middle West to the fact that in the agricultural States the per capita wealth is greater than it is anywhere else.

It is proper for me to say this because I represent very largely an agricultural district, as many other gentlemen here do, and it is also proper for me to say that when the time heretofore has come that the men, and the young men especially, have been called upon to defend the Union, on the average the largest per cent, according to population, has come from the farms, the little towns, and villages, where the greatest per cent of per capita wealth is to be found. Mr. Chairman, the Rockefellers, the Carnegies, the plutocrats, and these great fellows, according to common notoriety, as charged on the floor of the House and in the newspapers, fade into insignificance when you come to the per capita wealth of the hundred million people of the United States. That was a little side-step I did not intend to put in, but I put it in because I represent an agricultural district. [Applause.] I think, man for man, take the hundred million people of the country, those in our agricultural districts are quite as intelligent and patriotic and quite as able to take care of themselves, and a little more so, than any similar population to be found elsewhere in the Republic in time of war or in time of peace. [Applause and laughter.]

As I look back over the history of this pension legislation and the progress of the country, the only wonder to me is that the aggregate of these pensions is not much greater than it is. No man could be pensioned, could get a service pension, if I recollect correctly, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr SHERWOOD] will correct me if I make a mistake, until the Sherwood bill was passed, unless he could trace his disability to the service in the line of duty. No widow could be pensioned up to 1890 whose husband had died unless she could trace his death to the service in the line of duty in the Army, and then she could only be pensioned, if I recollect right, at $8 a month, a little less than $100 a year. In 1890 the law was amended by which a widow, if I recollect right, might be pensioned at the death of her husband at $12 a month, or was it $8—$8, says my friend from Idaho [Mr. SMITH]—and the dependent widow, who made a living by washing or otherwise could have $150 a year—she started, I think, at $8 a month——

Mr. ASHBROOK. If she had an income of $250 a year, she was denied a pension.

Mr. CANNON. That was later on.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That was the act of 1890, and in 1908 the pension was increased to $12 a month, and the income provision was eliminated.

Mr. CANNON. And to-day the widow who married her husband after 1890, the date of the act, can not get a pension for any sum unless she can trace the death of her husband to the line of duty in the Army.

Mr. ASHBROOK. A very difficult thing to do.

Mr. CANNON. A very difficult thing to do. That was 26 years ago, substantially. I am interested in the legislation which we have enacted, and which I hope will be enacted at this session of Congress. In February, I believe it was, we passed a bill to pension the widows of deceased soldiers of the Spanish and Philippine Wars who served 90 days and were honorably discharged, at the rate of $12 a month, and that, too, without regard to what caused the death of the husband.

We all voted for it. We did not split hairs on that side or on this side. It passed unanimously, without division. There were other provisions in the bill, but I call attention to that, because it is most largely for the benefit of the widows of the soldiers of that contest, provided they served 90 days.

Again, a little later, coming from the Committee on Pensions, was a bill pensioning the survivors of the Indian wars, a pretty broad bill. It is not necessary to have a discharge. Some people may slip in who ought not to slip in, but I know something of what pioneer life was from the forties on the Wabash and a little later in Illinois, all of which I saw and a part of which

I was, so that I am not going to split hairs about the Indian bill; but it passed through the House and went to the Senate. The Senate amended it and passed it, and it is now in conference and I have no doubt will become the law. The Senate has reported the Spanish War bill with an amendment——

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman there were no amendments.

Mr. CANNON. Reported it without amendment?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I accept the correction, and I hope and believe it will pass during this session in the Senate.

A gentleman, a Member of the House from Ohio, introduced another bill to make pensionable the widows of deceased soldiers who married after 1890—between that and 1905. Well, I think that is a good bill. I am in favor of people getting married. [Laughter.] That was 26 years ago, and it brings them down for 15 or 16 years. You know the widows who married from 1890 up to 1905, many of them—not a great multitude, but a great many of them—cared for the veteran soldiers, but on the average, the magazines and antipension people to the contrary notwithstanding; from the standpoint of patriotism, in God's chancery, the Ashbrook bill ought to pass. [Applause.] Will it? I do not know.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think it will.

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Ohio says he thinks it will; but why have the delayed wheels stood stationary?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure; but one thing I want to do, I want that bill passed, and I want to talk about it for a minute.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I want to say to my distinguishd friend my concern about this bill is fully equal to his, and I am very glad indeed to know that he is so much in favor of the bill, and I want also to say that I am very much disappointed that the bill has not been passed before this time. The gentleman understands this bill was reported February 29 from the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The two bills the gentleman referred to as having passed at this session of Congress were reported and passed at a time previous and at a time when the House did not have the appropriation bills on hand, and these various administration bills were not before the House. The gentleman also understands that the bill is privileged and can be called up only when the Speaker of the House will recognize some one for that purpose. I do not want to say anything that reflects upon the Speaker, because I believe he is in favor of the bill; he has assured me he is.

Mr. CANNON. I have no doubt he is.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I want to say also to the gentleman that I have visited the Speaker on the average twice every week since February 29 pleading to be allowed to call up this bill, but for reasons that seemed good to the Speaker he has not permitted me to call it up. I talked to him not later than yesterday and he said these appropriation bills must be passed this month, and just as soon as they are out of the way he would recognize me for the purpose of calling up the bill, and I am sure this House will pass it, and I have equal assurance at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I hope the prophecy of the gentleman is correct. Of course, the two bills I spoke of passed in February, I believe.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And this was reported——

Mr. ASHBROOK. February 29.

Mr. CANNON. February 29, within a week or two after the other bills passed. I am not now criticizing the Speaker or any individual——

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Can it be possible that in a Democratic House the passage of a bill depends in any way upon getting recognition from the Speaker? I thought we had abolished that when we went into the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is apparent the gentleman from New York does not understand the rules of the House.

Mr. CANNON. There is a way under the general rules of the House to pass this bill if the Speaker was dead against it, but the general rules of the House do not seem to operate much. How is that? says somebody. On the call of committees, under the general rules of the House——

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. CANNON. Just let me finish this and then I will yield to the gentleman. On the call of committees it is in order any day after the Speaker's table is cleared, after the committee is called and the consideration of the bill is entered upon and 60 minutes have passed by, that, as a question of the highest privilege under the rules, where a Member addressing the House might be taken off his feet, and a motion would be in order to take up this bill or any other general bill on either the House Calendar or the Union Calendar.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Do I understand from the gentleman that a bill which is privileged also can be called up under the call of committees?

Mr. CANNON. That does not affect the case. Under the call of committees, on Calendar Wednesday it might and under unanimous consent it might——

Mr. ASHBROOK. I understand that.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of something that can be done regardless of the Speaker of the House, and I say it because the Speaker of the House is not disposed to keep the House from doing what it wants to, but we have grown into this practice.

I am not going to talk much about it, but I will say that the Committee on Rules is composed of 11 members, with responsibility divided; and the easy way has been, instead of proceeding under the general rules of the House to legislate, for the Committee on Rules to perform and perform and perform, so that, instead of legislating under the rules of the House, you are practically legislating by the grace of the Committee on Rules. I believe in the future a majority of the House will endeavor to work a reform in that respect. There has not been a day, if you except Calendar Wednesday and other special days—and there have not been many of them set aside for particular business since the Reed rules were adopted—that a majority could not in one hour, by calling the regular order, after clearing the Speaker's table on call of the committees, reach a bill and take it up for consideration. And that has applied since 1891 down to the present time. Now, I recollect when I had the honor to be Speaker—and I am not going into ancient history, as it is not necessary—I was called a "czar." All kinds of accusations were made against me. Some Members said "the Speaker would not let us consider bills," using the refuge of cowards. [Applause.] Then—and now, perchance—the trouble was that the bill the Member was interested in did not have a majority. And I refer especially now to the Littlefield bill, which the gentlemen will recollect. And that was the trouble. Thereupon I became a scapegoat by a species of lying. But I will drop that, because that is all behind us, and all this is spoken of to show that we can transact business if there be a majority that desires to transact business without frequent resort to the Committee on Rules. And so much for that.

Now, I have the assurance of the gentleman that this widows' bill will be passed. I wish it could be passed soon. I wish there could be unanimous consent—and otherwise it would be subject to a point of order—to have it tacked onto this appropriation bill. That is not a very good way to legislate; but you, my friends, will remember the Post Office bill and the other appropriation bills have made it almost respectable to legislate in that way. [Laughter.] And in some instances you follow our example, but in following it you "run and glorify," pulling your coat tails over your heads in distancing what we did.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to say to my distinguished friend that I have no personal pride in this widows' pension bill. I am only anxious it shall become a law, and I would be very glad, if the gentleman likes, to have him offer it as an amendment to the pension bill now pending. I say that in perfect good faith.

Mr. CANNON. I know the gentleman does. But the gentleman knows it would be subject to a point of order. I should be very greatly gratified if the gentleman would offer it. If he prefers that I do so, I will be glad to do it. There can not be anything of discredit to it. If there be anything of credit, the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on Pensions, is entitled to it. I am not seeking to demagogue or to curry favor in these matters.

Oh, I am 80 years old. My time grows short. I recollect well that great struggle for the Union. It has passed from our minds very largely and is a matter of history. The pension rolls have decreased 50,000 plus in a year. It would have been impossible, let me say, at any time prior to the Sherwood bill, or even then, to have passed a bill for the widows giving them $12 a month where their husbands had died, without regard to the injuries received. It could not have been done. Now, we did it for the Spanish War soldiers with 90 days' service against Union war service all the way from 90 days to 4 years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In that connection, does not the gentleman also favor something in addition being done for those widows who married either before or during the war, who are sometimes called, for want of a better name, "war widows," who were left behind when their husbands went to the front, with only $13 a month to take care of themselves and family?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Twenty dollars a month for war widows, who were wives of soldiers during the Civil War.

Mr. ASHBROOK. And $20 a month for all widows on the pension roll when they reach the age of 70 years.

Mr. CANNON. Two very good provisions. And there is the provision of $12 a month for those who were married since 1890, up to 1905. The bill is very admirable in all its provisions, and I compliment the committee for having reported it.

Now, perhaps, I have talked as long as I ought to have talked about this bill, but yet let us have a little something now that smells of partisanship. I am not going to quarrel with gentlemen who represent populations south of the Mason and Dixon line. Thank God, in one generation the feeling has largely passed away. [Applause.] I am not one to open old sores. And yet, let the truth be told. I am not blaming the men individually—I am only speaking of them as Representatives—and we all try to represent the people who have chosen us as Representatives. It is proper to say that. There is always one, sometimes more, sometimes half a dozen, willing to be nominated in our places in order to come here, and there is always one of the opposite party, sometimes two or three, willing to try chances at the ballot box. This is a representative democracy. And yet it is true that the leaders of the opposition party, the Democratic Party, from the Southland, substantially voted against the act of 1890 and the Sherwood Act.

It is true that the leaders of that party from south of Mason and Dixon's line, reenforced by 7 Republican Members and by some Democratic Members from the Northland, voted against the Sherwood Act. I am not abusing anybody for that. If I recollect aright two gentlemen who are now Members of the President's Cabinet—I believe it is not lèse majesté to mention them—Brother Redfield and Brother Burleson, at that time Members of this House, voted against the Sherwood Act. Before I print that statement I will verify it, but I think I am correct. I am not fighting old battles, but I said I would be a little bit partisan.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The gentleman remembers also that the famous leader of the House at that time, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Payne, a very great man, voted against it.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I said there were 7 Republican Members.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. He spoke and voted against that bill.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; there were 7 Republicans from the Northland who voted against it, and there were 11 Democrats from the North who voted the same way. Quite generally our fellow Democrats from the South voted against it. Had that bill depended on the Democratic side for its votes it would have failed.

I think I would not have referred to this at all, but once in a while a young man comes into the House, glib of tongue, keen of intellect, and he goes down there in front and he talks to us for 20 or 30 minutes. He talks about this, that, and the other. He does not see much good on our side in our platform, but he flaps his wings and crows when he comes to his platform. Why, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], standing there in front, twitted us and said, "Ah, you did not put anything in your platform about pensions for the soldiers, and we did"; and the gentleman proceeded with his remarks, running amuck as it seemed to me. It occurred to me at the time that he had not read the soldier plank in the Democratic platform very closely.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The Republican platform?

Mr. CANNON. No; the Democratic platform. It reads:

We renew the declarations of recent—

With emphasis on "recent"—

Democratic platforms relating to generous pensions for soldiers and their widows and call attention to our record of performance in this particular.

The Republican Party does not need to assert its friendship for the soldiers of the Union. Its actions speak for it. It is action, not words, that tell. "Do men gather figs from thistles or grapes from thorns?"

I am glad they put in the word "recent," because the men who controlled this body and controlled legislation practically, in the last Congress with your great majority and in the present Congress with your present majority, went into secret caucus upon questions economic and all other great questions, and there debated and voted, so that if Members did not agree with the legislation passed by caucus they were not good Democrats. That was the way you legislated in the last Congress. It is the way you have legislated in this Congress; and without speaking disrespectfully of him, your President, nominated to succeed himself—in my judgment the nomination will not make him succeed himself [applause on the Republican side]; but let that be as it may, if it does, he will be my President then as he is now [applause on the Democratic side]—has made respectable all Presidents in the history of the country by sending down his arbitrary commands to the House and the Senate.

Mr. HILL. And to the convention.

Mr. CANNON. And to the convention. Talk about Czar Roosevelt, and about old Czar Jackson, and Czar Grant, and all the other czars we have ever had, there could not be any bigger czar than Wilson. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] But after all, God knows! It is said in Holy Writ that "Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth." We have had four years of it. I think we have got our full dose. But let that be as it may, I pass on.

There is one other matter I want to refer to in pure self-defense. There is a soldiers' home at Danville. There are about 2,500 soldiers of the War for the Union and sick and disabled ones of the War with Spain and the Philippine war. Danville is a little city now of about 40,000. We are prospering. We are increasing about 10,000 every decade, and have for the last three decades, and I think we will just about keep it up this decade. It is a very comfortable home. The men there are awaiting for the end. They have fallen by the wayside, friends dead, relatives dead, families dead. Some of them are helpless in the hospital. Some of them are partially helpless. All of them are there by right under the law. They are waiting patiently for the end. Once in a while, with that large number, of whom the smaller part are from the War with Spain, an old man feels that he ought to have more pension than he is getting. He makes his application to the Pension Office, and does not fill the measure of proof. I get quite a number of requests to see if I can not have special acts passed to give them increases. I am not criticizing the Committee on Invalid Pensions. They have a rule by which they go, and as long as that rule lasts I do not expect to be able to get a favorable report upon quite a number of these cases, because I am officially told that while it does not appear in their rules the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House and the Committee on Pensions of the Senate—I hope I may be corrected if I am wrong about it—have agreed that neither committee will report favorably a bill to increase the pension of any member of the national soldiers' homes, without which favorable report it is impossible to pass special bills. I think my information is correct. Mind you, I am not criticizing personally any of these gentlemen, but I am only saying this much by way of explanation. It will save my writing many, many letters to some of the 2,500 soldiers who are in the home there.

Now I am content with having said what I have, and I have the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] to thank for what he has said. Before I sit down, I pray God that there never may be occasion for another such a soldier's roll as we have had since the close of that great struggle. [Applause.] I think perhaps the best way to see that we do not have another such great loss of life is to be prepared. I think it is apt for me to say, as I have said before, that it is idle to hope that we shall forever keep out of trouble. We are a nation of 100,000,000 people, and 70,000,000 of our increase has come since 1860. As yet we have but barely scratched the surface of the United States proper. Yet we have one-half the mileage of the railways of the world, and one-third of the wealth of the world. We shall continue to increase until in the fullness of time we will have five, six, or seven hundred millions of people, and it is a vain hope that we will not get into trouble sometime. Therefore I am for being ready—not extravagantly ready; but I would be ready upon the sea, the first line of defense. Instead of having two-thirds enough sailors to man the ships we have got, I would have enough to man the ships. I would put men in training to man those ships that are to be built, for which we are to appropriate, and do it as fast as possible. [Applause.] I would do this because that is the great line of defense. If we can not get them in any other way I would increase the pay. We pay twice as much for effort, muscular and mental, in the United States as is paid anywhere else in the world. So I am perfectly willing to increase the pay of the private soldier and of the sailor. I think if we get the enlistment we will have that to do unless we wait until the great trouble comes, which will involve, when it does come, a stretch of the patriotic heart of our population, in which event they will come as they came in 1861. It will be terribly expensive, but not so expensive in dollars as expensive in human life, to get ready. I would have a sufficient and an efficient Army for ordinary occasions, and if I had my way about it I would have a Navy that could protect our coast. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has occupied one hour.

Mr. CANNON. And I am through.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD.

Mr SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the United States is the only great country around the world, except Russia, that has failed to enact legislation for the care and comfort of its worn-out workers. The men and women of the shops, mines, and farms, who produce all our wealth, and who have made this the richest Nation around the world, are treated with total indifference after their working days are over, and turned out to frost-bitten grass and cold neglect like a worn-out dray horse. And yet our orators and statesmen call this the only great Republic on earth, where the people—the plain people, if you please—have the rule and destiny of the Republic in their keeping.

For over a quarter of a century we have been squandering millions of the hard-earned tax money of the people in preparation for war, when there has been no war threatened and no prospect of war, while the Empires of the Old World, and the great continental islands of the Pacific Ocean, have been enacting legislation in the interest of their industrial workers that put to shame our pretense of humane legislation. Why not do something along the lines of human progress by enacting substantial legislation for the benefit of that widely neglected class, too poor to organize a congressional lobby in their own interest. I would set apart, say, twenty millions as a starter for old-age pensions to the worthy workers. This would be ample for the first year. Nothing would do such valuable service in healing the constant conflicts between capital and labor as a system of old-age pensions, such as an English Province, under an English King, inaugurated way out on the broad Pacific Ocean. Not only would this benign alleviation of the woes of the workers heal the antagonism now so apparent in labor strikes, but it would be an inspiration of patriotism to every worthy worker in the United States. Our flag would then be a hope and a symbol of helpfulness, saying to every son of toil, "Be true, be faithful to your trust, and when old age comes on apace this flag with the shining stars will be your protector, and a grateful Nation will help you to make your last days on earth comfortable and full of gratitude." As a matter of national defense, it would be a cognate inspiration to every worker.

This proposed system of economic reform and patriotic preparedness would appeal to every working citizen throughout the United States as a measure of both justice and mercy, and it would prove a balm and a sweet solace to that great troubled army who do the world's work and bear most of the burdens of taxation, with no grateful sense of realizing any benefits.

Under our form of government, with all power not conceded to the Federal Government reserved to the States, it is not within the jurisdiction of Congress to enact contributory old-age pensions. Hence my bill is based on the system successfully adopted in New Zealand.

Let me recount some humane legislation in the Old World monarchies. The Hon. Frederick G. Howe, an able student of civics, gives an interesting account of a German machinist, who lived and worked in the United States for five years and then returned to Germany on account of the old-age pension law. I quote from Prof. Howe's article, printed in Pearsons Magazine for May:

> If I should by chance be killed in Germany, my wife and children are then taken care of out of the pension fund. But more important than this is the protection I get—the old-age pension—when I am old. Again, we are insured in Germany against sickness, so that the three constant terrors of the workers—sickness, accident, and want in old age—are removed by humane laws.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN GERMANY.

Old-age and invalidity pension laws in Germany had their origin in the year 1899, and their operation embraces practically the whole working population of the Empire, with the exception of employees of the General Government or municipalities and teachers and tutors in the schools, where they have a right to separate pensions.

The pension fund is constituted by equal contributions—compulsory—and a subsidy from the Government. Old-age pensions are obtainable by persons who have reached the seventieth year; but the invalidity pension can be obtained at any time when the earning power of the applicant has become permanently or partially impaired. Females as well as males are included in the pensioning scheme. Repayment is provided to the insured person or his survivors of contributions paid by him in case of death or industrial accident, and to females in case of marriage. The amount of pension which a person receives depends on the length of time he has been paying in his premiums to the pension fund, and on the time in which he has been in his respective class of wages. In any case he receives the minimum pension. The law stipulates that the pensions shall not be mortgaged nor otherwise disposed of. The old-age pensions are administered by means of 40 chief offices spread over the Empire. They receive the premiums and pay out the pensions. There are also minor offices attached which keep in direct touch with the people insured.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman know whether or not the German pension system has any conditions attached to it with reference to the ability of those legally liable to take care of the pensioner? In other words, a man may be old or crippled, but he may have those who are amply able to care for him. In that instance does he still receive a pension?

Mr. SHERWOOD. He does under the German system.

Mr. HARDY. Regardless of those who may take care of him?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes. Let me call the attention to the Members on this floor who may be indifferent to the demands of our workers that practically the whole industrial population of Germany is insured against accident, sickness, invalidity, and old age. About 14,000,000 are insured against sickness, or, including the families, over 60,000,000 people. The number insured against accident is 24,000,000, while the number insured against old age and invalidity is over 16,000,000. All told there has been paid in pensions the colossal sum of $2,500,000,000 to the workers, of which the working classes paid less than one-half, the employers and the State contributing the balance. This vast sum was contributed solely to alleviate the wants of the industrial classes. And the German Empire is ruled by a hereditary king. How about the United States, supposed to be a Government of the people for the benefit of all the people, a Republic where the power of hereditary rule is supposed to be an unknown factor in our ethics of government? How generously or how justly have we provided for the benevolent succor of our great army of industrial workers after their working days are over? Is the proposition to take care, in their old age, of the men and women whose industry and skill made this the richest Nation around the world to be given no serious consideration, when the leading monarchies of the Old World have made this humane legislation the basic idea of their economic policy?

OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN FRANCE.

The law establishing a universal compulsory system of old-age insurance for workmen and employees in France was enacted in March, 1910, and promulgated in April of that year. The law is an extension of the law of July 14, 1905, which established a right to relief on the part of all persons over 70 years of age with incomes under a certain specified amount. The law of 1910 provides for compulsory insurance for wage earners and salaried employees in industry, commerce, agriculture, and domestic service, and optional insurance for independent farmers and producers. It provides further for equal contribution by employers and employees in case of compulsory insurance. It grants a State subsidy of 60 francs, beginning with the liquidation of pensions at the age of 65 years in compulsory insurance, and a varying subsidy up to the same limit in voluntary insurance.

As in Germany, so in France, employees of both sexes are included under the compulsory system, except State employees of departments and communes. Under the compulsory system the contributions per annum for an adult male amount to 9 francs, for a female to 6 francs, and for minors under 18 years of age to 4.50 francs. The employer must pay an amount equal to that of the employee, and it must be borne by the employer exclusively, any agreement to the contrary being declared null and void.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

The old-age pension law of Great Britain provides in brief that every British subject of 20 years' standing and residence in the United Kingdom who has attained the age of 70 years and is without a yearly income in excess of £31 10s. ($157.50) shall, on application, receive a weekly pension ranging in about 1s. to 5s., according to the value of other income. Certain disqualifications may exist, such as the receipt of poor relief, habitual idleness, detention or maintenance as a lunatic, and conviction of an offense for which the penalty is imprisonment without the option of a fine. A court convicting a person of 60 years of age or upward under the inebriates act may order his disqualification to receive a pension for a term not exceeding 10 years.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN NEW ZEALAND.

To the continental island of New Zealand belongs the credit of being the first country in the world to establish a straight-out old-age pension system. After the subject had been agitated about two years an act was passed in 1898, going into effect on the 1st of November of that year, which provided for the payment of old-age pensions out of the general revenues of the Government to persons duly qualified under the law, without contributions from either the beneficiaries or employers. The pensions are freely granted by the State, and the cost and administration are the concern of the central Government alone. In 1908 an act was passed under which several millions of acres of Crown lands were set aside as a permanent endowment for old-age pensions.

The pensions are limited to one class of persons—the aged and not undeserving poor of both sexes. A claimant must be 65 years of age, have resided 25 years continuously in New Zealand, be a British subject—of other than Asiatic origin—and a person of reasonably good character. A claimant must prove that during at least 5 years preceding his application he or she has led a sober and respectable life. No pension is granted to anyone who has spent more than four months in prison during the 12 years previous to his application or has been convicted four times of any offense punishable by 12 months in prison. The crime of wife desertion is a special bar to pension. When a claimant has complied with the requirements of the law under the head of residence and character, he has still to prove the qualification of comparative poverty.

When the law was first enacted the full pension was fixed at £18 a year, and this was raised in 1905 to £26 a year ($130). This is $30 higher than provided in my bill. To obtain this maximum sum a pensioner must show that his income is less than £34 ($170) a year. For every pound a year above that sum which he earns or receives he forfeits the right to a corresponding amount of pension, so that a person in receipt of an income of £60 ($300) a year from private sources would cease to be entitled to any pension whatever. In the case of a husband and wife, their joint income may be £90 instead of £60. Accumulated property, other than a cottage and garden, is also a disqualification when it is above the amount of £50 ($250). For every £15 beyond that sum the claimant forfeits £1 ($5) of pension.

Severe penalties are imposed for fraud and evasion in obtaining a pension. They include a possible six months' imprisonment, heavy fines, and the forfeiture of property. Even death does not release the pensioner for liability, if it should be discovered that he died possessed of more than the stipulated amount, for the Government may then require his executors to surrender his estate and reimburse itself for all that has been paid to the deceased. Pensions are paid to the beneficiaries through the post offices, at which all pensioners, if physically able to do so, must personally attend and draw their money. The percentage of cost of administration on the whole sum disbursed in 1908 was only 1.67, and it was then estimated that at no time would it exceed 2 per cent.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN AUSTRALIA.

The first State of the Commonwealth of Australia to make provision for the payment of old-age pensions was Victoria, whose legislation on the subject came into operation in January, 1901. New South Wales followed suit in August of the same year, and in July, 1908, Queensland established an old-age pension system. Finally an act providing for the payment of old-age pensions throughout Australia was passed by the Commonwealth Parliament in June, 1908, and pensions under that act began to be paid July 1, 1909. This Commonwealth act superseded the State acts in so far as provision for old age is concerned. The Commonwealth act, as were the acts of the individual States, was closely modeled upon the New Zealand law. The pensionable age is fixed at 65 years, or, in the event of permanent incapacitation for work, at 60 years. Age qualification for women is fixed at 60 years. The residential qualification, though at first fixed at 25 years of continuous residence, was reduced in 1909 to 20 years.

The rate of pension payable is determined by the commissioners or one of the deputy commissioners appointed under the act and is fixed at such amount as the official considers reasonable and sufficient, but must not exceed in any event £26 ($130) a year, nor be at such rate as will make the pensioner's income, together with pension, exceed £52 ($260) a year. Regarding accumulated property, the Commonwealth act follows quite closely the provisions of the New Zealand law.

Belgium: Pensions are paid at the age of 65 years, after 30 years' service, or in case of physical disability, after 10 years' service.

Holland: Pensions are paid to all employees reaching 65 years of age or for disability after 10 years' service.

Sweden: Pensions are paid at the age of 65 years after 35 years' service.

Switzerland: Each of the 22 Cantons has a different civil-pension system. Teachers are the only federal employees who are pensioned.

Turkey: After 30 years' service a pension may be claimed if, through sickness or bodily infirmity, the employee is unable to attend to the duties of his office.

Egypt: A service pension may be claimed after 25 years' service. All employees are retired by law at the age of 65.

Japan: Pensions are paid after 15 years' service, beginning at one-quarter of the salary and increasing one two-hundred-and-fortieth for each year of service over 15. Any official may retire at the age of 60 years.

Even big railroad corporations, that are said to have no soul, have inaugurated old-age pensions. The Baltimore & Ohio was the first railroad in the United States to grant a pension to superannuated workmen. This was in 1884. The Chicago & Northwestern Railroad inaugurated an old-age pension in 1900, pensioning employees of 30 years' service who reach the age of 70 years 1 per cent of the average monthly pay. The Lake Shore, the Pennsylvania, and other trunk lines have adopted service pensions for faithful employees when their days of usefulness are past, all based on merit and long service. We have bills before Congress that are meritorious, pensioning the old and faithful clerks who have served the Government for a quarter of a century. My bill makes no distinction between the faithful and long-service employees of the Government and the faithful and long-service workers who do the world's work and produce the world's wealth in our mines and factories and fields.

The following important railroads have adopted the old-age pension system:

Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, the Delaware & Lackawanna Railroad, the Houston & Texas Central Railroad, the Illinois Central Railroad, the Oregon Short Line, the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, the Rock Island System, the Southern Pacific Railroad, the Union Pacific, the New York Central Lines.

Altogether these trunk lines aggregate 45 per cent of the entire railroad mileage of the United States. They provide for a liberal pension on the retirement of their faithful employees. Nearly 1,000,000 men are employed. They provide, on an average, a pension of 30 per cent of the salary of the employee for the last 10 years. Retirement is permitted at 65 years and compulsory at 70. No contributions are required from railroad workers.

We have provided liberal pensions for the volunteer soldiers of the great Civil War and all other wars, and still more liberal pensions for the soldiers of the Regular Army. In an official report from the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, submitted to this Congress, I find a table showing the very generous pensions paid to enlisted men in our Regular Army, who are retired after a service of 30 years. The average pension paid these soldiers is over $35 per month. And yet soldiering in the Regular Army is the safest physical employment in the United States, not even excepting farming. For three decades, from 1870 to 1880 and from 1880 to 1890 and from 1900 to 1910, covering a period of 30 years, the vital statistics show that more men lost their lives on farms from being caught in agricultural machinery or kicked to death by horses or gored by vicious bulls than were killed in the Regular Army. This does not include suicide by soldiers, of which there were 44 in the Army in 1915. The vital statistics show that, for the three decades, serving in the Regular Army was the safest employment in the United States, counting both fatalities through external causes and death from disease or exposure.

The fatalities among the workers in shops and mines and in railroad service are over twenty times as numerous as in the Army, covering a period of 50 years. These men and women produce all the wealth of the country and have received no alleviating legislation by Congress. According to the latest available statistics there were 2,600 fatal accidents in coal mines in 1915; building and construction, 1,900 fatalities; the fatal accidents in quarries in the United States for 1913, as reported from the Bureau of Mines, were, killed, 183 out of 75,387 employed inside; number of men killed in coke ovens in 1914, 45 out of 22,313 employed; number of killed on steam railroads in the United States in 1915, 2,058, and 38,336 injured. The interstate commerce report of 1916 says:

This statement includes 1,878 killed and 12,189 injured as the result of accidents.

The Machinists' Monthly Journal for August, 1915, says:

The number of fatal industrial accidents among the wage earners of all the States in all industries approximates 25,000 in a single year. This is an appalling list. The number of destitute widows and fatherless children who are left without either support or charitable gratitude, no one seems to know. There are no statistics available.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman then believes that the money we now spend on appropriations for a war that was fought half a century ago is money more wisely spent than it would be to protect this country from the dangers that may now threaten it?

Mr. SHERWOOD. If the gentleman will tell me what the danger is that now threatens us, I will answer the question.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Is there not some danger at this time on our Mexican border? Have not men and women been murdered and property destroyed there? Have not our rights been invaded upon the high seas, and has not the President of the United States had to serve a practical ultimatum on more than one country, and especially one country, because of the invasion of our rights?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not want the gentleman to make a stump speech in my time. We have about 24,000 soldiers on the Mexican border, and 9,000 Cavalry; and, first, I want to say that all wars in this country have been fought principally by volunteer soldiers, and every battle for humanity since God made man has been fought by volunteer soldiers. Down on the Mexican border what brought on this war? Here was Villa, a bandit, with 380 other bandits. We had at Columbus, N. Mex., 3 miles from the border, these experienced, cultivated graduates in the Regular Army in command. We had five companies of Cavalry, a fully equipped battery of machine guns, and they had notice that Villa was approaching, a two days' notice, and yet they went to sleep at night without guard, without a picket line, without an outpost guard, with their guns locked in the gun racks, and Villa came in there and ran away with 65 horses, murdered several American citizens, and I do not know how many soldiers, and got away. If we had had volunteer soldiers in command, in my judgment, they would have chased him that night. What did they do? They waited for orders from higher up. They reported to Gen. Pershing, and then Gen. Pershing reported to Gen. Funston, and Gen. Funston in turn to the war office, and no immedate move was made to chase Villa.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Now——

Mr. SHERWOOD. I do not want to have any more interruptions of that kind. You do not claim Mexico as a great power? You do not think we want a big army to fight Mexico, where they are killing each other off now as quickly as they can. And Mexico has not declared war against the United States.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I want to suggest to the gentleman that Texas, while in her infancy, sustained a successful war against Mexico, and if the United States does not want to do it now Texas will take care of it.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Does the gentleman not think that Texas alone could take care of Mexico?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Surely.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Certainly it could. You do not need any more Regular Army there. The National Guard alone could take care of Mexico.

During our whole national life of 127 years no nation on either continent has ever declared war against the United States. All our wars with foreign nations have been of our own seeking. If no nation ever attacked us when we were weak, there is not the remotest probability that we shall be attacked when we are in population and resources the most powerful Nation in the world, with no enemies anywhere.

Look at the extravagant legislation for the benefit of our Regular Army. A private soldier who serves 30 years is retired for life on the pay roll at $35 per month; a chief musician at $90 (and this is a noncombatant position); a drum major at $67 per month.

As I have already stated, the vital statistics for 30 years show that soldiering in the Regular Army is the safest occupation in the country. These soldiers have the best of food and clothing, the best sanitary conditions, the best medical service, and have the comforting assurance that if true and faithful the Government has provided liberal pensions for their care and comfort in their old age. This great army of soldiers are a tremendous burden on the taxpayers of the country, and as the bulk of our taxes are by tariffs and internal-revenue taxes, the laboring classes have to bear more than their equitable share. In other words, every worker in our shops and mines and fields has not only to support himself, but is compelled, figuratively speaking, to carry an idle soldier on his back. It is outrageous injustice to compel the industrial workers to wear out their lives in the productive industries, and when their working days are over be cast adrift to eke out their declining days as the victims of private charity, as a burden on the local community, while the great army of idlers, who for 30 years have been a grievous burden on the taxpayers, receive munificent pensions for life.

The hour is timely to bring this vital question—the most vital of all economic or ethical questions—to the attention of Congress and the country. I have introduced and hope to push into national law this old-age pension bill, based upon well-tried experience in three leading nations across the Atlantic and two great continental islands in the Pacific.

Is it possible in a Republic supposed to be a Government administered in the interest of all the people that this just and righteous question is to be treated with cold and indifferent neglect? Is it true that the men and women in our mines and factories and fields, who produce all our wealth, have to look for light and hope in their declining years to the imperial kings and kaisers across the Atlantic? Would it not be safer and better for this rich and powerful Republic to consider the economic advantages of this humane measure aside from its appealing benevolent features?

Did it ever occur to you that a national flag is chiefly valuable for what it stands for? The flag of a Republic like ours is typical of the Nation's purpose, in the line of justice, equality, and the humanities. The purposes of a people or a nation are only reflected in its laws. Humane legislation is the surest inspiration for loyalty of the men and women who do the world's work. Let us recognize the claims of the industrial classes, in the speedy passage of alleviating laws. This would inspire a more sympathetic admiration for the flag and a deeper devotion to our best ideals of democracy than unmeaning flag waving and skyrocket oratory, exploiting extravagant armies and navies, and domination of the big oceans. This bill is constitutional and meritorious, and if enacted into law will do more to mollify the conflicts between capital and labor than all the legislation of the past. It will not only give hope and comfort to every one of our great army of wealth producers, but will place this Nation on a par in benign legislation with the leading monarchies of the Old World.

In closing let me express the fervent hope that the many humane laws enacted under the superb guidance of President Wilson—the Federal Trade Commission—the law giving the workingman the right of voluntary association for his welfare and protection—may be supplemented by old-age pensions, the most beneficent and far-reaching in the grateful humanities of all alleviating laws.

"In the soiled, grimy hand of the toiler
Is the little white hand of a child.
No rings on the thin little fingers—
On the wrist shines no glittering band—
But dearer than diamonds and rubies
Is the touch of the little white hand.
There are millions of thin little fingers
In this overrich, bountiful land
That are robbed of their fullness and dimples,
The birthright of each little hand.
Then, comrades, be vigilant ever
With the weapon you have at command!
Stand fast! Never falter or waver
For the sake of the little white hand!"

[Applause.]

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

JUSTICE HUGHES'S OPPOSITION TO THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, for nearly a hundred years the power of the Federal Government to lay a tax upon the income of vested wealth was fully conceded by the legal profession and sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, whose members included some of the most brilliant men in American public life. But in 1894, when the growing corporate wealth of this Nation and the accumulations of vast fortunes had reached a point undreamed of in our early history, an attempt of the Federal Government to lay a just share of the burdens of taxation upon vested wealth was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court by a majority of one.

The objection was not to the power to tax incomes as such, but was based upon the constitutional requirement that direct taxation should be apportioned among the several States in accordance with population. As a practical proposition this made the levy of an income tax impossible, because the great corporate incomes of a Nation like ours become centralized in a few States, although those incomes are derived from the productive toil of the united Nation extending through an entire group of States. In other words, wealth had become centralized and localized, although its sources were nation wide and arose from the complex commercial activities of all of the people.

The vested fortunes which are localized in New York or in Massachusetts were not produced from the soil of those States nor from the labor of their citizens, but are the joint product of the natural resources of the Nation and the combined activities of all its people. The great railroads, banks, insurance companies, manufacturing industries, and money-lending organizations must have a local habitation, but their source of profit is nation wide. Not only is their wealth derived from the Nation at large, but the protection of that wealth, both at home and abroad, is a charge upon the Treasury of our common country, and must be paid for by taxation in some form under national authority. Yet the effect of holding that an income tax could be levied only upon the rule of apportionment is to defeat such a tax altogether and permit the greatest accumulations of wealth to escape their fair share of the common burden.

We were expected to raise the national revenue, which was used largely for the protection of this corporate and vested wealth, by a species of taxation by duties upon imports whereby almost the entire burden was placed upon consumption; that is to say, upon the average producer and toiler to the almost total exemption of the fortunate owner of invested capital. To correct this gross injustice, it became necessary to propose to the States an amendment to the Federal Constitution, not for the purpose of enlarging the Federal powers of taxation but for the purpose of changing the rule of apportionment so that a practical method could be adopted for taxing the incomes of corporate wealth. Congress proposed such an amendment, and it went before the States for ratification.

Charles E. Hughes, now a candidate for President on the Republican ticket, was at that time governor of the great State of New York, the legislature of which was of his political party. The most powerful opposition to the income tax came from certain elements in New York. It can not be said to have come from the great mass of the people of that State, but from the powerful and closely knit group of financial interests which seek to dominate certain forms of political activity. The interests of this powerful class were directly opposed to the adoption of the income-tax amendment, and every resource that brains could devise and boldness could attempt was used to that end.

Gov. Hughes sent a message to the Legislature of New York, specifically recommending that it refuse to ratify the income-tax amendment to the Federal Constitution. The only reason he gave therefor was that in his opinion the amendment was so broad as to permit taxation by the Federal Government of State bonds and other instrumentalities of the several States. His message on that subject has been incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 12, 1916, by the Hon. PAT HARRISON, of Mississippi.

While I would not assume to place my opinion as a lawyer in opposition to that of one who has occupied a place on the Supreme Bench of the Nation, yet I find that the almost unbroken line of decisions in this country demonstrate the unsoundness of the governor's position. The fallacy of his arguments have been pointed out by distinguished members of his own party, and I am emboldened to place them before this House. The message of Gov. Hughes was dated January 5, 1910.

The Republican Legislature of New York, which was in sympathy with him, refused to ratify the amendment. The alarm went out through the country that the great State of New York had, upon the opinion of its distinguished governor, refused to ratify, and therefore that the amendment would probably fail in the other States where it was then being considered. On February 10, 1910, Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, of Idaho, arose in the Senate and delivered an attack upon the reasons assigned by Gov. Hughes. For closeness of reasoning and relentless logic his speech has rarely been equaled. Mr. BORAH said:

> Mr. President, a few weeks ago one of our most distinguished and justly celebrated public men, Gov. Hughes, of New York, sent a message to the New York Legislature recommending against the ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution providing for levying an income tax without apportionment. It has been assumed by the public press since the message of the governor that it would be impossible in view of his declaration to secure the enactment of the amendment. So firm a hold has the governor of New York upon the public mind and so high is the estimate in which he is held as a lawyer that it was regarded as in a nature conclusive against the amendment. After some considerable consideration of the matter it occurs to me that there are at least two sides to the proposition, and in my own opinion the grounds stated for the rejection are not such as to prevail against the amendment.

He then proceeds to show that in the famous case of McCullough against Maryland, Chief Justice Marshall held that the State of Maryland had no power to tax a branch of the Bank of the United States because it was an instrument of the Federal Government. It was not shown that there was any specific limitation in the Constitution upon the general taxation power of either the States or Federal Government which affected the question, but Justice Marshall showed conclusively that the entire form and structure of our Government recognized the dual sovereignty of the State and Nation and therefore neither could weaken nor destroy, under the guise of taxation, the instrumentalities of the other. To do so, he said, would be to tear the entire fabric of our National Government to shreds and destroy the basis upon which the National Constitution itself was founded.

His reasoning demonstrates as clearly the impossibility of the Federal Government taxing the instrumentalities of the State, such as State bonds, salaries paid to State officers, or proceedings in State courts, as it does that of the State taxing the like instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

Following this there have been a long line of Federal decisions expressly denying to the Federal Government the power to tax any of the instrumentalities of the State. The leading case is Collector v. Day (11 Wall.), followed by the case of The United States v. Railway Company (17 Wall., 327), in which the court said:

> The right of the States to administer their own affairs, through their legislative, executive, and judicial departments, in their own manner, through their own agencies, is conceded by the uniform decisions of this court and by the practice of the Federal Government from its organization. This carries with it an exemption of those agencies and instruments from the taxing power of the Federal Government.

Mr. BORAH then proceeded to show that the income-tax amendment did not, as Gov. Hughes claimed, enlarge the taxing power of the Federal Government, but that it simply changed the rule of apportionment of those taxes. In other words, Gov. Hughes's fears applied to the Constitution as it then existed and were utterly unsound and untenable as applied to the proposed change in the income-tax amendment. Even his fears of the existing Constitution had long since been dissipated by its actual construction by the Supreme Court. Not only so, but they had been combated before the adoption of the Federal Constitution by Alexander Hamilton in his essay in the Federalist. The same question arose before the Constitution was adopted that it might permit the taxing power of the General Government to be used for the destruction of the States, and Hamilton had proved how impossible this was.

Of course, we must assume that Gov. Hughes was not aware of the writings of Alexander Hamilton or the decisions of the Supreme Court, for we must assume that his message was sent to the New York Legislature in good faith.

In closing, Mr. BORAH showed the dangerous tendency of Gov. Hughes's recommendation and the crisis which existed in this country if it were determined that corporate wealth could escape its just share of taxation to meet the expenses of the Federal Government. He said:

> Mr. President, the history of the income tax since 1894 has not been one which any citizen can recite with pride. For nearly 100 years the construction of the Constitution, as established by the men who helped to write it, had received the approval of an undivided court time and time again. During that period there sat upon the bench of the Supreme Court some of the greatest lawyers of that or any other period of this or any other country. During that period wealth had not become so domineering and so powerful and so determined to have its own way. During that period this Government had the power to impose the burdens and expenses of Government upon consumption and upon all forms of wealth, and we did so In 1894–95 these precedents were overturned. This Constitution received a construction unknown to its makers. In the face of two powerful dissenting opinions, assented to by two other judges, the startling and astounding doctrine was announced that the framers of the Republic had made it impossible to levy a tax upon some forms of wealth, even in time of war; that the builders of this Government had made it impossible to dispose and divide the burden of Government between consumption and the different forms of wealth. At the last session we were called upon to express our assent to that interpretation of the Constitution, by express act to declare our acceptance of it. Under majority rule, there was submitted this amendment to cover and eliminate that supposed hideous defect in the fundamental law.

Now, Mr. President, the scheme and plan is to defeat that amendment. Having, as a legislative body, solemnly declared our acceptance of this construction of the Constitution, thereby making it practically impossible to again appeal to the court, if this amendment can now be defeated this Government of the people, for the people, and by the people will stand alone among all the civilized nations of the earth shorn of the power to divide the burden of government between consumption and the different forms of wealth. This is the scheme and plan, and, unfortunately, the great governor of New York has given much aid and comfort to the cause by reason of his high standing among the people of the country.

Mr. President, no one ever saw this country in just the condition in which it is to-day. Never since this Government was launched has there been such a universally restless spirit among the masses of the people, such persistent inquiry, such ugly questionings. No part of the Government seems above challenge or criticism, and it is fast becoming popular in some parts of this country to scoff at the Constitution itself. A restless, unquiet, dissatisfied, and, worst of all, a suspicious public mind is the public mind of to-day.

You can defeat this amendment, and I fear from the men who are gathering to the crusade that it will be defeated. Some of those who are proposing to encompass its defeat will not stop on the hither side of most disreputable means to accomplish their purpose. They are vitally involved. But when you shall have accomplished your purpose and the people shall have ascertained how their rights have been manipulated away it will go far toward exciting to renewed force and strength that feeling of wrath and class hatred which is already too strong in this country. When those who are ill able to bear the burden of government see the expenses of the Government constantly increasing, when they see the creation of larger navies and larger armies, the burden of expenses increasing everywhere, and learn that, after all, this entire burden must be borne by what they eat and what they wear, and that certain forms of wealth, which breed luxury, idleness, and idiocy, go untaxed, they will not listen to you when you are called upon to plead with them against radical changes in our form of government which will be submitted to this country within the next 50 years.

I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that the governors of the States and the legislatures of this country will do their duty and see that this amendment is adopted; that they will meet this matter, whether there is a division among them or not as to when it should be exercised, upon the basis that it is a power that ought not to be taken away from the Government.

The people should bestir themselves upon this vital matter before it is too late. It would be nothing less than a catastrophe for this amendment to be defeated, if we are, out of a false idea of courtesy, to be deprived of appealing through the court. It is the people's fight, and no one should be misled by the utterly unfounded proposition that this amendment contains the power to embarrass and destroy the States and "rend the whole fabric into shreds."

The succeeding Legislature of New York, which chanced to be Democratic, ratified the income-tax amendment, and it is now a part of the Constitution. Gov. Hughes became a member of the Supreme Court of the United States. The case of Brushheber against the Union Pacific Railway Co. came before that court, in which the question was the constitutionality of the income tax as levied under the Underwood revenue law. Its constitutionality was sustained on all points by an opinion of Chief Justice White, and no dissenting opinion was filed by Justice Hughes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

So much for the legal side of the proposition.

From a political standpoint there is no form of taxation to which the General Government may look to pay the rapidly increasing burdens of national administration and the added need of national defense which contains more elements of justice and more promise of success than the income tax. It is a tax upon accumulated wealth and the incomes from invested capital, and removes to that extent the tax upon consumption and upon toil. It taxes those great fortunes which demand protection from the Federal Government, but which without this means would almost entirely escape their just share of Federal burdens.

With the growing prosperity of the country the income tax has been increasing in amount, and to it we must look largely for the money with which to provide for national defense. If the opinion of Justice Hughes had prevailed in the present world-wide disturbance of trade and the uncertain income from tariff on imports, this Nation, although one of the richest and most powerful in the world, would be in a disgraceful condition of financial insolvency. It would be denied the right to tax the great accumulated fortunes which free Government has made possible in this country. It would have taxed the labor of the toiler, but when that labor had passed into the form of concrete wealth and invested capital, it would have removed the burden from that wealth and placed it again upon the bending shoulders of the man who works for wages.

During the fiscal year 1914, the income tax was in operation for 10 months. The amount collected from corporations was $43,127,739.89; the amount collected from individuals was $28,253,534.85; making a total of $71,381,274.74.

During the fiscal year 1915, the amount collected from corporations was $39,155,596.77; from individuals, $41,046,162.09; total, $80,201,758.86.

During the fiscal year 1916, which will close on the 30th of June, the estimated revenue from corporations is $60,000,000; from individuals, $50,000,000; with a total of $110,000,000.

It is true that much of this wealth is centralized in the large cities, and particularly in the Eastern States, but the source of the wealth is nation wide. A great railroad company which has its general offices in Massachusettts or New York derived its income from the wheat, cotton, and live stock carried from the plains of the West and the plantations of the South. A great insurance company, domiciled in New York or Massachusetts, does not confine its commercial operations to those States, but levies a tax upon every thrifty man who buys a policy for the protection of his family between the two oceans. A great loan company, with headquarters in Wall Street, does not make its loans in that locality, but lends upon the farm of the Mississippi Valley and collects its interest from that horny handed son of toil who drags the wealth out of the ground.

The whole future of free government is involved in a just distribution of the burdens of government, and no more dangerous idea could pervade the American mind than that wealth in its accumulated and localized form could escape through the technicalities of the law its just returns to the Government which protects it and the flag under whose folds it had been created.

It is fortunate for the country that the views of Gov. Hughes did not prevail and that mere legal technicalities were not permitted to stand in the way of a just reform in the taxing system. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if it is possible to reach some agreement as to the limit of general debate?

Mr. MANN. We want 30 minutes on this side.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to one hour, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the other half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the other half by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of the Army and the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Army and the Navy. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my colleague Mr. CANNON I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak first of all for a moment or two in relation to the remarks just made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. He took occasion to say that the wealth of New York State did not come out of its soil or out of its industries, but was derived from the activities of other people outside of the State. If the gentleman from Missouri is not better informed as to his own State than he is as to the State of New York, his ignorance of that State is indeed profound.

The State of New York, if my recollection is correct, stands second among all the States of the Union in agriculture; and the county of St. Lawrence, in that State, leads every other county, with the possible exception of the county of Lancaster, Pa., in the value of its agricultural products. As to manufactures, something like 14 per cent of the entire manufactured products of the whole United States comes from within the boundaries of the State of New York, and in the city of New York, which I have the honor in part to represent, over 750,000 people are engaged in manufactures. He did not mean any insult to our State when he said we derived our wealth from the work of people outside of our State; he simply exhibited his profound, his abysmal, his almost stupendous, ignorance of the State of which he spoke. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Nor was his information in relation to Gov. Hughes and the income tax much more profound. It is quite true that Gov. Hughes sent to the Legislature of the State of New York a message, which has been inserted in the RECORD, and in behalf of the 24 Republicans from the State of New York I desire to extend my most sincere thanks to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] who inserted this message in the RECORD, because, I want to say to him very frankly that unquestionably, now that it can be done under frank, that message will be distributed by the Republican national committee as one of the many evidences that exist as to the learning of the distinguished gentleman who, after the 4th of March, 1917, will be President of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What did Gov. Hughes say? Before I come to that I want to extend our thanks to the gentleman from Missouri for bringing up this subject of the income tax. Who passed that constitutional amendment? The Sixty-first Congress, with a Republican House and a Republican Senate, and that is what made the income tax possible in the United States of America. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman put in as a part of his remarks the vote of the Democrats and Republicans on that measure?

Mr. BENNET. Without doing that I will say, as a matter of historical accuracy, that every Member of the House except seven in the Sixty-first Congress voted for it.

Gov. Hughes said:

I am in favor of conferring upon the Federal Government the power to lay and collect an income tax without apportionment among the States according to population. I believe that this power should be held by the Federal Government, so as properly to equip it with the means of meeting national exigencies.

But the power to tax incomes should not be granted in such terms as to subject to Federal taxation the incomes derived from bonds issued by the State itself or those issued by municipal governments organized under the State's authority. To place the borrowing capacity of the State and of its governmental agencies at the mercy of the Federal taxing power would be an impairment of the essential rights of the State which, as its officers, we are bound to defend.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri says as a consequence of that message the Legislature of the State of New York, to which it was addressed, failed to ratify the income-tax law. The gentleman is quite correct. The vote was not on partisan lines. I am not familiar enough with the politics of all the men who voted to state which was Republican and which was Democrat, but I note with interest that among the men who voted to sustain the views of Gov. Hughes in that assembly were Louis Stuyvesant Chandler, who was the Democratic candidate for governor against Gov. Hughes in 1908. Mr. Chandler had been lieutenant governor; he is a man of intelligence, and the reasoning of Gov. Hughes appealed to him. Nor is that all.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BENNET. I will yield for a question; yes.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman remember the reasons that Gov. Hughes gave, or, at any rate, why he vetoed the 2-cent railroad rate in New York State?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by putting those reasons in as a part of my speech.

Mr. FINLEY. But what does the gentleman from New York understand? He must have some views.

Mr. BENNET. It is about three pages long, but I will put it in the RECORD so that the gentleman can read it.

Mr. FINLEY. But he did veto that bill?

Mr. BENNET. He did.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by putting in the RECORD the veto message of Gov. Hughes in reference to the 2-cent fare. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. FINLEY. Is there any State in the Union where the 2-cent rate would be more properly applied than in the State of New York?

Mr. BENNET. I am absolutely sure I do not know, as I am not familiar, for instance, with the State of South Carolina and do not know what the conditions are there.

Mr. FINLEY. But the travel is very great in New York State.

Mr. BENNET. I must not yield further to the gentleman. I will put in the RECORD that for which the gentleman asks. As I was saying when the gentleman asked me the question, the distinguished Democrat who ran against Gov. Hughes in 1908 was a member of the legislature that upheld Gov. Hughes's opinion in 1910. Nor is that all. The distinguished gentleman who drew the income-tax law, the Hon. CORDELL HULL, of Tennessee, a sound lawyer, in that act placed this provision, which I find on page 5 of the income-tax pamphlet supplied to us from the document room:

That in computing net income under this section there shall be excluded the interest upon the obligations of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, and upon the obligations of the United States or its possessions.

Also:

And the compensation of all officers and employees of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, except when such compensation is paid by the United States Government.

Why, the gentleman from Missouri says that when the income tax came before the Supreme Court of the United States, of which Gov. Hughes had become a member, he voted to sustain the constitutionality of the act. Of course, because the act expressly excepted those sources of income to which he objected when sending his message to the Legislature of the State of New York. I doubt if the gentleman from Missouri knew that. That is all I desire to say upon the subject. Gov. Hughes was upheld by the best opinion of New York State at that time. The bill which came before him as a judge exempted the securities which he said ought to be exempted, and as a member of the Supreme Court he voted to sustain the act which contained those exemptions.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. TAGGART. He was simply in apprehension of what Congress might do under such an amendment when he recommended that the New York Legislature should not ratify the constitutional amendment?

Mr. BENNET. He was.

Mr. TAGGART. Let me ask the gentleman, he was afraid Congress might levy a tax on the State and municipal obligations of the State of New York and other States under the amendment?

Mr. BENNET. He was the governor of the State which paid the largest share of the income tax into the Treasury, the amount in 1915 being a trifle over $27,000,000. The gentleman from Mississippi, who inserted those remarks in the RECORD, comes from a State which contributed less than $100,000 from that source to the Treasury of the United States.

Furthermore, in our State of New York we have to some extent mortgaged the future for good roads for which we are paying, canals for which we are paying, and it was absolutely essential in the judgment of the sound and sane man who wrote that opinion that the credit of the State of New York should be protected, and it was deemed so essential in the judgment of the Democratic Congress that passed the income-tax law that they excepted from the provisions of that law precisely the securities that the governor said ought to be excepted. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I desire just for a moment to allude in passing to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] this morning. I was not surprised, I can not say I was greatly shocked, when I heard him rise and say that this pension bill, which we all favor, had been reported some time in February, and that every week since he had gone to the Speaker and begged and pleaded for recognition so that he could bring the bill, which he favors, and which the majority of the House favor, before this House.

And my mind turned back to the Democratic platform of 1908, and lest some of us may have forgotten what the Democrats said then about a similar situation, I desire, for the information of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], who, I think, had forgotten it, to read into the RECORD just what they said:

Legislative control becomes a failure when one Member in the person of the Speaker is more powerful than the entire body.

We demand that the House of Representatives shall again become a deliberative body, controlled by a majority of the people's representatives, and not by the Speaker; and we pledge ourselves to adopt such rules and regulations to govern the House of Representatives as will enable a majority of its Members to direct its deliberations and control legislation.

And yet in the third Democratic House since that time we find a prominent Member of the Democratic Party rising and complaining that he can not bring a bill, in which his heart is wrapped up, before this House, because the Speaker will not let him.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The gentleman understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] to state that the Speaker said there were other bills upon the calendar, namely, appropriation bills, that were required to be passed before the 1st day of July, and that the only reason he did not recognize him to call up the widows' pension bill was because he said that those appropriation bills ought to be passed first, and that there was no intention on the part of the Speaker to prevent its being called up.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, yes; but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] either misses or intentionally does not see the point, namely, that in this Democratic House the very thing against which the Democratic platform of 1908 protested exists, and that in order to get a bill before this House it still depends upon the right of recognition by the Speaker.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Now will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BENNET. For a question.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does not the gentleman know that under the rule as it now exists and under the practice that now obtains in this House the Speaker can not prohibit this bill being introduced and properly considered in this session?

Mr. BENNET. I will have to answer that in my own way by saying that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] called the attention of the House to the fact that the committee had reported the bill; that he had been going to the Speaker twice a week ever since, including yesterday, and I imagine he was not doing a vain thing. Why, of course, ever since I have been in Congress a determined majority, by simply voting down everything else, could bring us to the call of committees, and by voting aside committee after committee could bring up any bill it desires.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does not the gentleman know that the power to take up these matters rests with Congress and not with the Speaker?

Mr. BENNET. I refer the gentleman from South Carolina to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] for answer as to that. I prefer as a practical man the plaintive plea of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] to the abstract theory of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE].

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am asking for your opinion, though.

Mr. BENNET. Does the gentleman wish my opinion?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENNET. I will say that this is the fourth Congress in which I have served, and the sixth I have observed more or less closely, and I have yet to see the Congress where a man could get legislation through without taking into account the Speaker.

Mr. RAGSDALE. That is not the question I asked the gentleman—not taking the Speaker into question—but does not the real authority rest with the Congress, and if a majority wants to take it up they can take up anything?

Mr. BENNET. There has not been a Congress since the First Congress when, if a Congress wanted to take up anything, they could not do it—that is, by voting down everything else—and the Sixty-fourth Congress does not differ in that regard from the Congresses which they criticized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, the majority of Congress can remove the Speaker, and were in a position at one time when they could have removed him, but did not attempt to do so.

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

For the remainder of my time I decline interruption, Mr. Chairman.

I desire to speak for a few moments concerning one portion of the Democratic platform adopted at St. Louis yesterday, and to read, before coming to that, some remarks by the President of the United States addressed to the two Houses of Congress on December 7, 1915, as follows:

I am sorry to say that the gravest threats against our national peace and safety have been uttered within our own borders. There are citizens of the United States, I blush to admit, born under other flags but welcomed under our generous naturalization laws to the full freedom and opportunity of America, who have poured the poison of disloyalty into the very arteries of our national life; who have sought to bring the authority and good name of our Government into contempt, to destroy our industries wherever they thought it effective for their vindictive purposes to strike at them, and to debase our policies to the uses of foreign intrigue. Their number is not great as compared with the whole number of those sturdy hosts by which our Nation has been enriched in recent generations out of virile foreign stocks; but it is great enough to have brought deep disgrace upon us and to have made it necessary that we should promptly make use of processes of law by which we may be purged of their corrupt distempers. America never witnessed anything like this before. It never dreamed it possible that men sworn into its own citizenship, men drawn out of great free stocks such as supplied some of the best and strongest elements of that little, but how heroic, Nation that in a high day of old staked its very life to free itself from every entanglement that had darkened the fortunes of the older nations and set up a new standard here—that men of such origins and such free choice of allegiance would ever turn in malign reaction against the Government and people who had welcomed and nurtured them and seek to make this proud country once more a hotbed of European passion. A little while ago such a thing would have seemed incredible. Because it was incredible we made no preparation for it. We would have been almost ashamed to prepare for it, as if we were suspicious of ourselves, our own comrades and neighbors! But the ugly and incredible thing has actually come about and we are without adequate Federal laws to deal with it. I urge you to enact such laws at the earliest possible moment, and feel that in doing so I am urging you to do nothing less than save the honor and self-respect of the Nation. Such creatures of passion, disloyalty, and anarchy must be crushed out. They are not many, but they are infinitely malignant, and the hand of our power should close over them at once. They have formed plots to destroy property, they have entered into conspiracies against the neutrality of the Government, they have sought to pry into every confidential transaction of the Government in order to serve interests alien to our own. It is possible to deal with these things very effectually. I need not suggest the terms in which they may be dealt with.

I wish that it could be said that only a few men, misled by mistaken sentiments of allegiance to the Governments under which they were born, had been guilty of disturbing the self-possession and misrepresenting the temper and principles of the country during these days of terrible war, when it would seem that every man who was truly an American would instinctively make it his duty and his pride to keep the scales of judgment even and prove himself a partisan of no nation but his own. But it can not.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that that message came to us on the 7th of December, 1915—to a Senate and House both Democratic. Has any such law been passed? Of course not. Why has it not been passed? Because there was absolutely no necessity for such a law [applause on the Republican side] and because no such situation existed as is set out in those remarks. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But our President has his phases.

On the 31st of January, 1916, only about six weeks after that language I have just read, he journeyed throughout the country, and in the course of his journeying came to a great city famous for many things, the city of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, one of our few entirely native-born cities. [Laughter.] When he got before that audience the President said this:

America has drawn her blood and her strength out of almost all the nations of the world. It is true of a great many of us that there lies deep in our hearts the recollection of an origin which is not American.

A very graceful tribute to his own mother, who was born in Scotland.

We are aware that our roots, our traditions, run back into other national soils. There are songs that stir us, there are some far-away historical recollections which engage our affections and stir our memories. We can not forget our forbears; we can not altogether ignore the fact of our essential blood relationship; and at the outset of this war it did look as if there were a division of domestic sentiment which might lead us to some errors of judgment and some errors of action; but I, for one, believe that that danger is passed. I never doubted that the danger was exaggerated, because I had learned long ago, and many of you will corroborate me by your experience, that it is not the men who are doing the talking always who represent the real sentiments of the Nation.

That is true in his case.

I for my part always feel a serene confidence in waiting for the declaration of the principles and sentiments of the men who are not vociferous, do not go about seeking to make trouble, do their own thinking, attend to their own business, and love their own country.

I have at no time supposed that the men whose voices seemed to contain the threat of division amongst us were really uttering the sentiments even of those whom they pretended to represent. I for my part have no jealousy of family sentiment. I have no jealousy of that deep affection which runs back through long lineage. It would be a pity if we forget the fine things that our ancestors have done. But I also know the magic of America; I also know the great principles which thrill men in the singular body politic to which we belong in the United States. I know the impulses which have drawn men to our shores. They have not come idly; they have not come without conscious purpose to be free; they have not come without voluntary desire to unite themselves with the great Nation on this side of the sea; and I know that whenever the test comes every man's heart will be first for America. It was principle and affection and ambition and hope that drew men to these shores, and they are not going to forget the errand upon which they came and allow America, the home of their refuge and hope, to suffer by any forgetfulness on their part. And so the trouble makers have shot their bolt, and it has been ineffectual.

Yesterday, the President of the United States, in the platform which he drew, which was adopted because he wanted it, said:

We condemn all alliances and combinations of individuals in this country, of whatever nationality or descent, who agree and conspire together for the purpose of embarrassing or weakening our Government or of improperly influencing or coercing our public representatives in dealing or negotiating with any foreign power. We charge that such conspiracies among a limited number exist and have been instigated for the purpose of advancing the interests of foreign countries to the prejudice and detriment of our own country.

Mr. Chairman, first the severe, then the gentle, then the severe. When will the gentle come again? But I want to say to my colleagues on the Democratic side, fellow Members of this House, that it is a coward's part to attempt to arraign without specifications the 14 per cent of foreign-born people in this country. I represent a city whose population is largely foreign born, and do not believe that there is one single conspiracy in this country such as is charged in the Democratic platform. Name the organizations! Go on record. Rise in your places like men. Oh, do not do like that man of old whom you will find told about in Nehemiah, sixth chapter and sixth verse, with which all of you perhaps are familiar, who when he wanted to bring down the good man who was doing the good work in Jerusalem wrote him a letter and said—

It is reported among the heathen, and Gashmu saith it.

If you have the goods on anybody, get up and say who they are. I see my colleague [Mr. FARLEY] there, and I will not embarrass him by asking him to answer a question. He is a good, loyal man, born in Ireland. He will never rise in his place on this floor and say there is any organization of Irishmen disloyal. [Applause.] I see my friend [Mr. LOBECK] back there. I will not ask him to rise and reply, but I prophesy now that the time will never come when he will rise in this House and say that any organization of Scandinavians or Germans is disloyal to the American flag. [Applause.] I see my friends DUPRÉ and ESTOPINAL, of French and Spanish descent, respectively. Regular and constant in their attendance, as they always are, good Members, they will never rise in their places and say that there is any organization of Frenchmen or of Spaniards disloyal to the flag of the United States. [Applause.] And so you can go down the whole list. But it is easy to assassinate character in the dark. Who was the first person who did it, according to recorded history? The devil, in the first chapter of Job, when he came before Jehovah and Jehovah said to him:

Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?

Then Satan answered the Lord, and said, Doth Job fear God for naught?

Hast not Thou made an hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? Thou hast blest the work of his hands, and his substance is increased in the land.

But put forth Thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse Thee to Thy face.

That was the first recorded instance of this kind of political maneuvering indulged in by a well-known historical character, and this declaration in the Democratic platform is a cowardly lineal descendant of that utterance. [Applause on the Republican side.] I never have much use for the kind of man who sits around on a cracker box and says of some good man in the village, "He seems to be all right, but I will bet he has a bottle hid away somewhere," or when the good man's domestic relations are above reproach says, "He seems to be all right, but I wonder what he does when he goes to Chicago to buy goods." That is the kind of spirit in which this platform declaration was written. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RAUCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART]. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable discussion of the income tax to-day while this bill appropriating money to pay pensions has been under consideration. It is proper to consider at this time the value of an income tax. There has been an almost universal demand in this country for a great expenditure for preparedness. All of the great parties have been favorable to it. I am not one of those who would say that it was because anyone is afraid, or because anyone imagines that he sees spectral armies coming in phantom ships to our shores; but it is because the world has seen the devastation and ruin of Europe, and because we realize that it is among the remote possibilities that at some time we may be obliged to defend this country.

The most fortunate statute that is on the books to-day is the income-tax statute. In the able speech that was delivered here by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] he called attention to the fact that that income-tax law will bring into the Treasury of the United States during this fiscal year the sum of $110,000,000.

The cost of pensions for the survivors of the Union Army is less than $100,000,000 at this time, so that this income tax will more than pay the pensions for the next year that will be due to the veterans of the Civil War, considered apart from other pensions.

We have listened to the very able and entertaining speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], one of the most charming Members of this House and one of the ablest men in it. It seems as though he wishes to boast that a good share of this income tax comes from New York. Is it not proper that it should come from the great center of wealth?

If it is a fact that 750,000 people are engaged in manufactures in New York, we are happy to say that in our country we furnish a market for everything that is manufactured in the city of New York. The money that pays these 750,000 hands comes in a great measure out of that magnificent country west of the Alleghany Mountains. The wealth of New York has come out of the great garden of the West. The people there are the ones who are able to patronize the 750,000 manufacturing population of New York City. And, strange to say, although there are 500,000 of those employees engaged in manufacturing within a radius of 10 or 15 miles of the center of New York City, they have uniformly and in every election voted against a high-protective tariff, and have furnished one of the most impressive arguments that can be made against the doctrine of a protective tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But we need the income tax and we need the manufacturing people of New York. We have a right to demand a heavy tax from anyone who has gotten rich off the American people. The burden should be borne by those who are best able to bear it. We tried to relieve the 750,000 and put the burden on the few who got rich on the profits of their labor.

The House has listened with interest to the attack upon and defense of the record of Judge Hughes. Attention has been called to the fact that when he was governor of New York, and the amendment to the Constitution of the United States to allow Congress to levy and collect an income tax came before the Legislature of New York for ratification, Gov. Hughes opposed it, giving as his reason that an income tax under the amendment might possibly be levied on the bonds and securities issued by the State of New York and the municipalities of that State. This is a matter of public record and is a legitimate argument. It is not personal.

I hope and believe that this will be the cleanest campaign in the history of American politics. We have for the principal candidates for President two of the ablest men of the country, and whatever might have been the opinions of Judge Hughes on the income tax when it was presented to the State of New York for ratification as an amendment to the Constitution, he stands now before the American people as a candidate for President, and will succeed or fail on the issues that are presented by the respective platforms. I believe the American citizen is sick and tired of personal abuse of candidates for office; and right here I can not forbear to introduce into the RECORD an editorial that appeared in the Washington Post of this date. As a Democrat I desire to acknowledge my deepest respect for the sentiments expressed in this great newspaper—the leading Republican paper of Washington. Beginners in politics, and those who are seeking honors in public life will do well to study carefully what is said in this article. The editorial in full is as follows:

It is always pleasing to note progress, advancement, and betterment in any of the activities which distinguish national life or in those processes which call forth action by the masses of the people.

Presidential campaigns in the United States during the past 30 years have been conducted upon a much higher plane of political work than some of those made prior to 1888. There must be no retrogression in this campaign. The people of this country, regardless of party, demand that it shall be distinctively free from all elements of atrocious politics.

It will not be a campaign of personalities, a campaign of mud slinging, a campaign of abuse or of false accusation.

Any political clique, faction, or element of any of the great political organizations which would stoop to employment of such methods would surely bring upon the party to which they belong the condemnation of the great majority of the people of the United States.

It is exceedingly gratifying to those who take pride in our institutions and in the uplifting of the public sentiment of the Nation that for many years there has been no toleration by the public of political methods that tend to lower or to degrade political work.

This campaign ought to be, and will be, conducted through appeals to the intelligence of the voters, not through play upon passions or prejudices, not through attempts to sully or to soil or to strain reputations of candidates for the lowest or the highest positions.

The people of the United States will be swift to condemn and strong to reprove any man or any party resorting to vicious practices or evil processes in attempts to advance party political fortunes.

Slum politics and gang or ward methods have no place in presidential elections in the United States, and those who would introduce them deserve and should receive the emphatic denunciations of all respectable citizens.

Let the intellectuality of the Nation be appealed to for decision as to national policies and rejection or approval of the issues of the campaign.

Let the business sense of the country be sought in the consideration of those issues affecting our financial, commercial, and industrial affairs.

Arouse wherever and whenever possible the active or the latent patriotism, for it will give beneficial results to the Republic.

The campaign, conducted upon the lines as suggested above will be one creditable to our country, to our political parties, and stimulating to the self-respect of our citizens.

In this campaign the people will read the platforms carefully. In that fortunate region where I have the honor to live and where men are free from the control of dictators in politics these platforms and these distinguished men will be judged fairly. There will be no personal abuse heaped upon either one of them. Both of them have rendered distinguished service—the President called to guide the Nation through difficulties such as it has not faced since the Civil War; the judge coming forth with a claim on the respect of the people, having been honored with the governorship of the wealthiest and most populous State of the Union, and crowned as a lawyer with a place in the most powerful court in the world, a court that is authorized to interpret the purposes of the American people as expressed in their laws.

Let us set the claims of these great leaders and the merits of their respective principles before the American people in the language of gentlemen and in the spirit of exalted patriotism.

Mr. MANN. I am going to ask for 10 minutes more on this side; and if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. RAUCH] wishes to ask for 10 minutes more on that side, so as to give the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] or anyone else any more time, I shall have no objection. I made a mistake awhile ago. That is the reason I am asking for more time now.

Mr. RAUCH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be extended 20 minutes, 10 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and 10 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be extended 20 minutes, 10 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and 10 minutes by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE].

[Mr. RAGSDALE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield now one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY].

[Mr. REILLY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, the eagerness with which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] raised a question upon the pension issue immediately following the adoption of the two national platforms impels me to make the few remarks which I shall in order that history may be kept straight, so far as this House is concerned. The Republican convention in Chicago was criticized for saying nothing about the old soldier. It is not necessary for an old-time Christian to be always professing. It is necessary for a recent convert perhaps to stand up and be loud and frequent in his professions. The Republicans' accomplished record is what interests and assures the old soldiers. That is perhaps why the gentleman from Missouri spoke of the recent utterances of the Democratic Party on the old soldiers and their pensions.

What I desire to say especially is with reference to the vote on the legislation which is now the 1912 act. I would not deprive any Member on either side of the House of any credit for voting for the liberal pension law which we now have. The great soldier from Ohio, Mr. SHERWOOD, a Democrat, is entitled to credit for the zeal with which he has worked for legislation of this character during the last three Congresses. The Speaker of this House, Mr. CLARK, the leading Democrat of the United States, has favored and supported liberally pension legislation in this House. There are others on that side who might be mentioned with favorable comment, as well as the almost entire Republican membership.

The law which we now have, under which the old soldiers are being paid, and which is usually referred to as the act of May 11, 1912, was carried through this House by the following vote: There were for the legislation 176 votes; against it, 76. The Republicans furnished 109 of the 176 affirmative votes. The Democratic side, then in a large majority, furnished 67, while the 76 votes against the legislation were every one furnished by the Democratic side. I say this in answer to the claim for partisan credit made by the gentleman from Missouri. I want it understood that it is the conference report on legislation of the Senate and the House which was voted upon, as I have said, passed, and is now in force. Under it the old soldiers are drawing their pensions.

The bill first introduced in this House in the Sixty-second Congress and known as the Sherwood bill was a much different bill from that which came back from the Senate and conference.

A special reason for making this brief talk is on account of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL], an eminent member of the Committee on Pensions during this debate, that a great Republican leader, Mr. Sereno E. Payne, of the State of New York, had voted against the old-soldier pension legislation of 1912. I presume the gentleman desires to have the history of this matter correct. This is the fact: When the bill was first passed in the House Mr. Payne, with 6 other Republicans, voted against the then called Sherwood bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I have had my secretary look up the vote on the Sherwood bill and its passage through the House, and he says to me that 7 Republican Members from the North, including Mr. Payne, voted against the passage, as the gentleman states, and that 11 Democrats from the North voted against it also.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. Mr. Payne, voted against the bill at that time with 6 others from the North. The bill was much different from the law as passed. It was then based largely upon service and not upon age. The bill went to the Senate and it came back, as it was said, a "double-standard bill," the element of age being mingled with the element of service. When it came back here for passage, Mr. Payne having voted against the original bill, voted for the conference report. I desire to read now the comment made at that time by Mr. Payne, which is to be found on page 6240 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Sixty-second Congress. Mr. Payne, speaking upon the conference report, said:

I think this—

The conference report—

more nearly covers the idea which I expressed upon the Sulloway bill, about proper legislation in reference to pensions, than if I had drawn the bill myself. I very cheerfully join with the friends of this measure in voting to sustain this conference report.

I desire to say now there were three Republican Members who voted against the original Sherwood bill and who voted for the conference report—Mr. Payne, of New York; Mr. HILL, of Connecticut; and Mr. Utter, of Rhode Island. Mr. Payne and Mr. Utter are no more; Mr. HILL is here and might speak for himself; but I take the liberty of saying that Mr. HILL, while he voted against the original Sherwood bill, when it came back to the House in the form of the conference report voted for that bill at that time, and therefore voted to support the law which is now upon the statute books. The other four Republicans who voted against the Sherwood bill are not recorded as voting on the conference measure, the basis of the present law.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; briefly.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state, if he knows, whether or not during the present administration, since the House and Senate and executive department have been Democratic, if any general pension legislation has become a law, or if it has not been entirely confined to special bills and no general legislation whatever?

Mr. SLOAN. That is my recollection and understanding. The vote on the bill when first passed was, for, 229, of which 1 was a Socialist, 76 Democrats and 152 Republicans—2 Republicans to 1 Democrat, although the House was almost 2 Democrats to 1 Republican.

Mr. LOBECK. Not in the Sixty-second Congress; that is the last Congress.

Mr. SLOAN. It was not quite that strong, but it was a large majority. To be precise, there were 160 Republicans and 229 Democrats. And against the bill at that time there were 93 votes, 7 being Republicans and 86 Democrats.

Now, as I stated in the beginning, every Member who voted for liberal pensions for the old soldiers is entitled to equal credit with every other Member, on whichever side he sat. I do not desire to raise any partisan question about it. It was raised by the gentleman from Missouri in his sudden haste and speed to claim partisan credit for the existing liberal pension laws. It demanded statement of the record. It shows every vote against the 1912 pension law was cast from that side of the House. One hundred and nine favorable votes were cast by the Republicans and 67 by the majority.

The Senate which passed this legislation was Republican, as was President Taft, who signed the bill. So if there is any partisan credit for liberal legislation which the old soldiers, their widows, and orphans now enjoy, it is due to the Republican side of the House, as it was due to this side of the House in all the pension legislation for a number of decades before 1912. Probably this afternoon when this pension appropriation bill is passed there will be an opportunity to show, in partisan or nonpartisan way, our devotion to the old soldier in support of the Ashbrook widow's pension bill. I hope it will be nonpartisan.

We will have an opportunity to provide more liberally for the war widows, for her who remained at home to look after hearth, home, and little ones while husband and father did battle for the Union. Her's were trials equal to his—that waiting, watching uncertainty in busy day and long night, through the battle with poverty and sickness which she alone must fight. The war wife of the sixties was a noble and heroic character throughout the North. The war widow of to-day is a grand, yet pathetic, figure whom a sympathetic Congress and a grateful people should generously remember. Under the provisions of this bill, whatever her age, this Government is to render monthly tribute of its greatest coin, the double eagle.

The young wife who wedded the returning soldier and who now is the widowed matron, who has crossed the scriptural border of threescore and ten, is to be equally recognized. Further, the soldier's widow who married him before 1905 is to be given a pensionable status.

When we liberally pension Union soldiers we do an act of justice and demonstrate the gratitude of the Republic. When we pension their widows we render that justice and generosity, the wish and prayer of multiplied thousands of dying veterans. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[Mr. RAUCH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. RAUCH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by Hon. W. A. Thompson, of my home city of Tahlequah, Okla., to the Daughters of the Confederacy, in which he took occasion to extol the virtues of the soldiers of the North as well as the South, and felicitated us upon a reunited country.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial published in the Washington Post of this morning entitled "The Democratic tariff plank."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the Washington Post of this morning on the Democratic tariff plank. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, during my service in Congress I have continually voted for liberal pensions for the survivors of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars, and I wish to extend my remarks in the RECORD on my position favoring liberal pensions to the survivors of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars, their widows and dependent children.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, namely:

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $158,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately: And provided further, That all allowances made, or hereafter to be made, to medal-of-honor pensioners under the act of Congress approved April 27, 1916, shall be paid from the moneys appropriated for the payment of invalid and other pensions, and section 3 of the said act of April 27, 1916, is amended accordingly.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1917, $65,000.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer as an amendment to this bill, H. R. 11707, the widows' pension bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ASHBROOK: At the end of the bill, after page 2, line 18, insert the following:

"That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow who was the lawful wife of any officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, during the period of his service in the Civil War, shall be $20 per month, and the rate of pension for a widow who has reached or shall hereafter reach the age of 70 years shall be $20 per month; and nothing herein shall be construed to affect the existing allowance of $2 per month for each child under the age of 16 years and for each helpless child; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private."

SEC. 2. That any widow whose name was placed or shall hereafter be placed on the pension roll, under any existing law, and whose name has been or shall hereafter be dropped from said pension roll by reason of her marriage to another person who has since died or shall hereafter die, or from whom she has been heretofore or shall be hereafter divorced upon her own application and without fault on her part, shall be entitled to have her name again placed on the pension roll at the rate allowed by the law or laws under which she was formerly pensioned, unless she be entitled to a greater rate of pension under the provisions of section 1 of this act, such pension to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act: Provided, however, That where the pension of said widow on her second or subsequent marriage has accrued to a helpless or idiotic child, or a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to renewal under this act unless said helpless or idiotic child, or child or children under 16 years of age, be then a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to said widow payment of pension to said child or children shall cease: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall be extended to those widows, otherwise entitled, whose husbands died of wounds, injuries, or disease incurred during the period of their military or naval service, but who were deprived of pension under the act of March 3, 1865, because of their failure to draw any pension by reason of their remarriage.

SEC. 3. That any widow, as described in section 2 of the act approved April 19, 1908, who married the soldier or sailor prior to June 27, 1905, shall have title to pension under the provisions of said section of said act, to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act: And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall include those widows whose husbands, if living, would have a pensionable status under the joint resolutions of February 15, 1895, July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906.

SEC. 4. That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the adjudication of claims under the first and second sections of this act.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I hope the gentleman will withhold his point of order. I would like to say to the gentleman that this bill has been on the calendar for more than three months. It is a meritorious bill, a popular bill, a bill that is sure to pass when it is reached in the regular order.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It ought to pass in its regular order, and not on this general appropriation bill. I insist on my point of order, that it is new legislation, and therefore not in order upon this appropriation bill. It involves an expenditure of money that has not been authorized by any law, and is therefore not in order upon this or any other appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not wish to be heard on the point of order, because I am well aware that it is subject to a point of order here. I was in hopes, however, that my good and gracious friend [Mr. PAGE of North Carolina], who is about to retire from this Congress, would not insist on the point of order; but since he has done so, I wish to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BENNET. I should like to be heard in relation to the point of order. I simply wish to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. RAUCH] that if he desires to attach this amendment to the bill there is a way in which it can be done. When the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] brought the District of Columbia appropriation bill into this House, the Committee on Rules reported a rule making a whole lot of legislation in order.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. As chairman of that subcommittee, however, I took the regular course in this House to make it in order, and did not undertake to pass it here out of order.

Mr. BENNET. I was just going to suggest, if the gentleman had not interrupted me, that if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. RAUCH] would pursue the same course that the gentleman from North Carolina did, he could secure the adoption of a rule which would make this amendment in order.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman pretend to be discussing the point of order while seeking to advise the gentleman from Indiana as to the procedure that he might follow?

Mr. BENNET. I do not pretend that strictly I am discussing the point of order. I imagine we all want to pass this, with the exception of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that if this came in from the committee reporting it in the regular way, I certainly should not undertake to make a point of order against it. I might vote against it, but at the same time I should not obstruct it in any other way.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman mean to suggest that the Committee on Rules, consisting of 11 men, ought to control the House touching proper legislation?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I do not say any such thing, but I do say that the rules of this House ought to be observed, and I think the gentleman from Illinois will agree with me. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Ohio make a request to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I did, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not withdraw his amendment except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, then, let it go in.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Of course he can do it by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio ask unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I ask that unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman withdraws it, I will renew it by reoffering the amendment. Let the point of order be decided.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will not ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

Mr. DYER. Let us have a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this amendment is clearly subject to a point of order, and was so recognized by the former Speaker of the House [Mr. CANNON] in his remarks in discussing the bill. When the question arose, an amendment of the character of the one under consideration, which clearly does not fall within the limitation of the Holman rule and which is new legislation, can not be sustained. Under the rules of the House the Chairman has no option. The point of order must be sustained, although the present occupant of the chair is personally very much in favor of the amendment.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "accordingly," insert: "Provided further, That in computing the length of military service in claims for pensions, furloughs shall be included and considered."

Mr. MANN. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. TAGGART. Will not the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will reserve it.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I know that the amendment is subject to a point of order. I have introduced it to cover a few cases where I think a great injustice has been done by the Government in the administration of the pension laws. There were a number of men who were first to respond to the call for volunteers for enlistment for 90 days; they performed their contract to the letter. Along about the last 15 or 20 days of their 90 days they were sent home on a furlough and told that they would be called upon in case they were needed. Their regiments had been asked to enlist for three years, and those who did not enlist for three years were sent home on a furlough. This happened in the case of a very few organizations. Strange to say, a number of these men were put on the pension rolls by the construction of the pension law that was made some years ago, and they are still drawing pensions. Then, after the change of ruling, others were refused pensions. I have in mind now the case of a man who served in the Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, who responded to the first call and served 90 days and, like others, was paid for 90 days' service. He was one of those who was furloughed during the last two or three weeks of that time. He applied for a pension, and a pension was paid to him until the time of his death. His widow, who would be otherwise entitled to a pension, if it were not for this ruling, made application, and the claim was rejected for the reason that her husband had a furlough during the last few weeks of the service, and it was claimed by the bureau that he was not subject to military control during that time and had not technically served 90 days. In his case he was treated as having served 90 days and in her case she was refused a pension because he had not served 90 days.

The ruling of the department was that those who had pensions granted to them continued to draw pensions, and those who applied after the ruling were refused pensions. I know that this is subject to a point of order, but it is comparatively a trifling matter and would add but very little to the cost of the pension rolls. I have not the exact number of men and women affected by it, but I think they can be counted by hundreds and would amount to less than a thousand persons at this time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the gentleman has ever introduced a bill on this subject or not. I never happened to see one, and so far as I know the matter has never been taken up by the committee.

Mr. TAGGART. Let me say that when we passed the Spanish War pension bill this very amendment that I have offered in this bill was put in the pension bill for the Spanish War widows.

Mr. MANN. That may be the reason why it has not passed the other body. The law says that a man must have served 90 days in order to get a service pension. A man who served 89 days does not get it without a special act of Congress, which he gets easy enough if he knows the ropes. But if a man must serve 90 days in order to get a pension I can not see any excuse for saying that if he served 60 days and went home for 30 days he should have a pension.

Mr. TAGGART. Suppose the record shows that the Government paid him for 90 days.

Mr. MANN. That is another thing. He got pay for 30 days without service. I suppose one of these days we will reduce the length of service from 90 days to 60 days, and probably that will not be very long. I do not know how many it will include. I do not think we ought to enact legislation of this sort that has never been considered by any committee, and the effect of which we do not know. I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15775, the pension appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAUCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Bridget Gaffney, widow of Patrick Gaffney, H. R. 5132, Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the pension appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the fortification bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print some extracts in the RECORD of the public papers of Charles Hughes when governor of the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar where we left off on yesterday, under the same conditions of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar where we left off on yesterday, and under the same conditions that we were operating under then. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Monday next, being unanimous-consent day, be dispensed with, that the House take up for consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill——

Mr. MANN. That is not necessary. It would be in order anyway.

Mr. KITCHIN. And that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business usually in order on unanimous-consent Monday be dispensed with on Monday next, that the sundry civil appropriation bill be considered, and that we meet at 11 o'clock a. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

PRIVILEGES ON THE CANAL ZONE.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15955) extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is willing to strike out section 1 of the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, in order to get consideration for the other sections I will consent to that.

Mr. MANN. Well, then, it will stay out?

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of trading at the commissariat, leave of absence, quarters free of rent, and all other privileges and exemptions now accorded by law, regulations, or practice to employees of the Panama Canal on the gold roll shall also be granted to the judge, marshal, and district attorney in the Canal Zone, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to refund to all such officers and employees all amounts paid by them for any such privileges during the time they were granted without charge to the employees of the Panama Canal on the gold roll.

SEC. 2. That, until otherwise provided by Congress, the President is authorized to make rules and regulations in matters of sanitation, health, and quarantine for the Canal Zone or to modify or change existing rules and regulations and those hereafter made from time to time. Violations of any quarantine regulations provided for herein shall be punished by fine not to exceed $500 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the court's discretion; and a violation of any sanitary regulations hereunder shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the court's discretion. Each day such violation may continue shall constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 3. That, until otherwise provided by Congress, the President is hereby authorized to make and from time to time change rules and regulations for levying, assessing, and collecting ad valorem, excise, license, and franchise taxes in the Canal Zone, or to modify or change existing rules or regulations for that purpose. The taxes on automobiles may be graded according to the value or the power of the machine, and such rules and regulations as now exist may be changed by such order from time to time, and any that may be hereafter made may be changed from time to time.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful to commit any breach of the peace or engage in or permit any disorderly, indecent, or immoral conduct in the Canal Zone. The President is authorized to enforce this provision by making rules and regulations to assert and exercise the police power in the Canal Zone, or for any portion or division thereof, and he may amend or change any such regulation now existing or hereafter made.

SEC. 6. That any person who commits any act or who carries on any business, trade, or occupation in the Canal Zone without complying with the rules and regulations established by the President for the levying, assessing, and collecting of taxes, or who violates any rules or regulations for the use of the public roads and highways, or who violates any rules and regulations touching the licensing, taxes, operation, and use of self-propelled vehicles, or who violates any of the police regulations authorized hereunder, shall be punished by fine not to exceed $25 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the court's discretion.

SEC. 7. That deposit money orders issued in the Canal Zone in lieu of postal-savings certificates in accordance with the rules and regulations heretofore established by the President, or that may hereafter be established by him, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 2 per cent per annum.

SEC. 8. That the interest received from the Canal Zone money-order funds deposited in banks under Canal Zone regulations shall be available to pay the interest on deposit money orders authorized by the preceding section. Such interest shall also be available to pay any losses which are chargeable to the Canal Zone postal service.

SEC. 9. SEC. 10. That all laws, orders, or ordinances in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "shall," insert the word "hereafter."

Page 3, line 18, after the word "time," insert the following: "The President may make mutual agreements with the Republic of Panama touching the reciprocal use of the highways of the Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama by self-propelled vehicles touching taxes and license fees, and any other matter of regulation to establish comity for the convenience of the residents of the two jurisdictions."

Page 5, line 11, insert a new section, as follows:

Page 5, line 22, strike out the figures "10" and insert the figures "11."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I now move to strike out the first section of the bill—all after the enacting clause. When the gentleman from Illinois reserved the right to object, I said, which he may have misunderstood, that in order to get consideration I would agree to strike this first section out. I hope the gentleman will understand that in perfect good faith I intended to stand by the elimination after it is made. I would not follow it to the other body and have it reinserted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a further statement. This section did not attempt to enforce the granting of these privileges. I do want to say to the gentleman, however, and to the House, that while there is a law now that will compel the American employees on the Isthmus to pay rent after the 1st of July, I wish it could be repealed, and while others do not all agree with me, I believe that the American employees on the Isthmus ought to have all of these privileges free, and if in any way I can vote to grant them those privileges outside of this bill I am going to do it. I am now ready for the question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the numbers of the sections be corrected to comply with the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under such regulations and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, bonded warehouses may be established in which imported garbanzo may be stored, cleaned, repacked, or otherwise changed in condition, but not manufactured, and withdrawn for exportation without the payment of duty thereon: Provided, That the whole or any part of such imported garbanzo, and the waste material and by-products incident to cleaning or otherwise treating said imported garbanzo, may be withdrawn for domestic consumption upon the payment on the quantity so withdrawn of the duty imposed by law on such garbanzo in their condition as imported: And provided further, That the compensation of customs officers and storekeepers for all services in the supervision of such warehouses shall be paid from moneys advanced by the warehouse proprietor to the collector of customs and be carried in a special account and disbursed for such purposes, and all expenses incurred shall be paid by the warehouse proprietor.

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its sitting.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 11707, with Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri in the chair.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, the hour is late——

Mr. MANN. Let us read the bill, and have the debate, if there is to be any, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I was about to say that the hour is late, and I ask that general debate be dispensed with, believing that gentlemen who wish to discuss the bill will have ample opportunity under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If no general debate is desired, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow who was the lawful wife of any officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the period of his service in the Civil War shall be $20 per month, and the rate of pension for a widow who has reached or shall hereafter reach the age of 70 years shall be $20 per month; and nothing herein shall be construed to affect the existing allowance of $2 per month for each child under the age of 16 years and for each helpless child; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

SEC. 2. That any widow whose name was placed or shall hereafter be placed on the pension roll, under any existing law, and whose name has been or shall hereafter be dropped from said pension roll by reason of her marriage to another person who has since died or shall hereafter die, or from whom she has been heretofore or shall be hereafter divorced upon her own application and without fault on her part, shall be entitled to have her name again placed on the pension roll at the rate allowed by the law or laws under which she was formerly pensioned, unless she be entitled to a greater rate of pension under the provisions of section 1 of this act, such pension to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act: Provided, however, That where the pension of said widow on her second or subsequent marriage has accrued to a helpless or idiotic child, or a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to renewal under this act unless said helpless or idiotic child, or child or children under 16 years of age, be then a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to said widow payment of pension to said child or children shall cease: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall be extended to those widows, otherwise entitled, whose husbands died of wounds, injuries, or disease incurred during the period of their military or naval service, but who were deprived of pension under the act of March 3, 1865, because of their failure to draw any pension by reason of their remarriage.

SEC. 3. That any widow, as described in section 2 of the act approved April 19, 1908, who married the soldier or sailor prior to June 27, 1905, shall have title to pension under the provisions of said section of said act, to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act: And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall include those widows whose husbands, if living, would have a pensionable status under the joint resolutions of February 15, 1895, July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the third section, in lines 20 and 21, by striking out the words "And provided further" and inserting the words "Provided, however."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the adjudication of claims under the first and second sections of this act.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11707) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, and had directed him to report the same to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have five legislative days in which to extend remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that all Members have five legislative days in which to extend remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ASWELL.) there were—ayes 94, noes 32.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If there is a roll call, and the roll call discloses that there is no quorum present, what will be the status of this bill on Monday morning?

The SPEAKER. The House agreed to a special order this morning for Monday.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; we agreed to set aside the order for Monday. This matter will come up Monday.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered on this bill, it will come up to the exclusion of the other things.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 19, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee not with costly oblation or with bleeding sacrifice. We come, we trust, with an humble and contrite spirit, lifting up our hearts to Thee for Thy blessing. We remember Thy goodness to us as a Nation. We acknowledge the infinite debt of gratitude we are under to Thee.

Since we have met together Thou hast called into the great beyond an honored Member of this Senate. We thank God for the long life of service that he has given to his country. We thank Thee that in departing he has left us with the inspiration of a noble and pure life and that he has left the benediction of faithful service to his own State. We thank Thee for his faith. We pray that being dead he may yet speak, and that the influence of a life unsoiled by contact with the great issues of state may remain with us as a joy and an inspiration.

We pray Thy blessing upon our country to-day. Lay Thy hand upon this land. Grant, we pray, that the time may not come when blood must be shed. Grant that out of all the turmoil and strife, out of the fire that seems aflame in all the world, Thou wilt in Thy providence and grace lead us safely in peace and guide us on to greater achievement of peace in the future. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR EDWIN C. BURLEIGH.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], and at his request, it becomes my sorrowful duty to announce to the Senate the death of the junior Senator from that State, which occurred at his home in Augusta, Me., on Friday last.

At some future time the Senate will be asked to lay aside its ordinary business in order that tribute may be paid to the life, character, and public services of Mr. BURLEIGH. For the present I offer the following resolutions, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

The resolutions (S. Res. 214) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. EDWIN C. BURLEIGH, late a Senator from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 20, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 19, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, in whom the destiny of our Republic is involved, we turn to Thee in this hour of distress when war, with all its attendant evils, seems imminent, and most fervently pray that reason, common sense, and justice may obtain and avert the crisis; that all the differences which have arisen between our people and the people of Mexico may be amicably adjusted without the shedding of blood. But if war must needs come we pray that we may be prepared to meet it with courage and fortitude, that permanent peace may be established and harmony prevail 'twixt us and the misled people of a country already rent and torn with internal strife. And Thine shall be the praise in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 17, 1916, was read and approved.

INCREASING PENSIONS OF WIDOWS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned on Saturday last the previous question had been ordered on the bill (H. R. 11707) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. JAMES (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I am against this bill, but in order not to lose any time I shall withdraw the point of order of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of order of no quorum. The ayes have it.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended by adding to it the words "and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15836, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Wyoming whether we can agree on a time for general debate?

Mr. MONDELL. How much time does the gentleman have in mind as being a proper time for general debate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. About two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. How would about two hours do as a compromise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think we need two hours. Here it is the end of June.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from New York that while I have not had requests for a great deal of time I rather expect a gentleman here who will want to occupy some time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have no desire to use any time on this side.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman does not come, he will not use the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman who is not here at present desire?

Mr. MONDELL. I think we need an hour on this side. In case the gentleman does not arrive we will, of course, not use the time he desires.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We might give it to him under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MONDELL. I think an agreement to have an hour on a side will be cutting the debate very short.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, pending his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one-half of that time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Wyoming. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming to use his time. I doubt whether I shall use any.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is important and necessary that the bill which is before the House should be passed, but, compared with the questions of the day, to some of which I shall invite the attention of the House, its importance shrinks into insignificance.

Of late much has been said and much has been done with reference to preparation of our Military Establishment for the near or more remote future. Little has been said—and almost nothing has been done in the way of its preparation for the present. And yet to the south of us every day the war cloud has been looming higher and blacker until now it almost is ready to burst upon us.

Not long ago I voted for a bill which authorized the President, in case of an emergency, to raise a Regular Army of 300,000 men. Some months ago we voted for a bill which authorized an addition of over 20,000 men to the Regular Establishment. And yet these men have not been obtained. The public has misunderstood the situation. The public has thought that the bills which we were passing increasing the Regular Army were expected to prepare us for the emergency which every one knew was likely to arise to the south, and yet here we all knew that whatever we did, or whatever we could do, would in no way make adequate preparation for what has now arisen between us and Mexico. I believe and have believed that we ought to make different arrangements which would more rapidly recruit our Regular Army. For the purpose of increasing the enlistments in the Regular Army I assisted in getting a provision in the Army bill shortening the term of enlistment. While this will stimulate recruiting it will not be enough. We must raise the pay of the Regular Army soldier. A slight increase in his pay would do more to fill up the ranks than anything else. This should have been done months ago. But no plan can fill up the Regular Army rapidly. Service in that force will never be popular and under any plan we could not hope to obtain the authorized number of troops in less than a year. I warn the House and the administration, however, that unless we do something to stimulate recruiting in the Regular Army we will never obtain the 200,000 that we authorized by the bill recently passed. For myself I want to say that I did not vote for these measures simply for a show or a pretense in the way of preparation. I desired the Regular Army recruited up to the limit and efficient in every way. For this reason I have voted for practically everything the department requested in the way of equipment. The amendment which I offered increasing the Signal and Aviation Corps failed in this body but was adopted by the Senate, and as everyone knows finally became a law. It has seemed to me that some Members were content with the shadow rather than the substance and if only we made provision on paper were indifferent as to whether our enactments had any practical effect. It is idle to talk about a Regular Army of 250,000 when we are not able under the present system of recruiting to add 1,000 men a month to our Regular forces. To continue in this manner is to deceive and mislead the people and to make our proceedings a mere sham and pretense.

For some reason which I have not fully understood and which I doubt if anyone can fully explain, the only method to make immediate preparation for the Mexican situation has not been used. It has been known in Congress, known by the administration, that only by the use of the militia could any adequate preparations be made to meet what might occur any day on the Mexican border. Offers of militia have been made—my own State offered three regiments of Infantry and one of Cavalry, fully equipped, even to the horses—State after State has made similar offers, and yet for some reason the only offers accepted are three States along the border.

In some way there has been a distrust implanted in the minds of many people with reference to the capacity of our militia to meet the situation now upon us. Indeed I might say it has been the fashion to speak slightingly of the service of all volunteers. Of course when we come to speak of the soldiers in the Civil War it is not at all necessary to come to their defense. Their record is too glorious and their valor too inspiring to need that anyone should speak in their behalf. The need is that this and future generations should follow their example.

At this point I shall digress upon another subject, although a kindred one, to say that I have noticed here and elsewhere somewhat of a disposition, I know not why, to conclude that the patriotism of the Middle West is not equal to that displayed by other localities. In answer I have only to point to the history of a hundred battle fields where the soldiers of the West in the Civil War maintained the finest traditions of this Nation. Some have thought that it would be impossible to fill our ranks with volunteers, that the militia would be unready to serve in the Middle West. Here again I have only to point to the record of that section in the time of the Civil War. My own State, with a population of about 275,000, furnished over 76,000 soldiers to the Civil War. It had at that time less than 100,000 men of military age and considerably less than that fit for military service. Nearly all of those fit went into that great conflict. That number could not have been furnished unless boys under age and men over age had enlisted. There was in fact one regiment composed almost entirely of men over age, some of its members being over 60 years old. It was facetiously but honorably called the "Gray Beard" regiment. Time and time again did Iowa furnish more troops than the President called for; nor was it alone in this respect.

The other States of the great Mississippi Valley had a similar record. The city of Chicago, with a population at the opening of the war, as I now remember, of about 176,000, furnished 28,000, and its regiments suffered such losses that Joseph Medill once said a crape might properly have been hung on nearly every door. And it meant something to enlist in those days when every mail that came from the South brought a new list of killed and wounded to add to the long list already made. It was not an enlistment training camp in those days. They knew that in their enlistment they presented their lives to their country for its use, if need be.

With such a record let no one doubt the patriotism of the Middle West. I represent an agricultural district the farmers of which are perhaps not so likely to be carried away by any passing enthusiasm or impulse of the moment, but the men of no district will respond more quickly to the call of the Government when danger and peril are actually upon it. The people of the Middle West revere the old flag. Their fathers and grandfathers were those who saved this country in the dark days of the Civil War. In many a home there is treasured a picture of a young soldier wearing the uniform which belonged to that mighty conflict, and whose life has been laid upon the altar of his country. Here and there, too, is treasured a sword or an old musket which father carried in that war. Have no fears for the patriotism of the Middle West. It will stand where it always has, for the old flag and the Nation.

And right here I wish to speak—and here I come to the matter which I specially intended to call to the attention of the House—of the service of the militia of this country in the past. There has been an extensive propaganda carried on in an effort to discredit the service of the militia in the War of the Revolution, the War of 1812, the War of the Rebellion, and the Spanish War. What may have been the purpose of attacking the militia I do not care to discuss. I wish to show that history has been perverted in its attempt to show that the record of the militia in our wars has been discreditable.

I know that the words of Washington with reference to the militia in the War of the Revolution have often been repeated. But Washington was speaking of the militia as they were organized and furnished to him and not of the militia as it might have been. The militia in the War of the Revolution were for the most part merely bands of men with arms put in their hands, without organization, and without drill. They were officered, as a rule, by men who had no knowledge of their profession and no opportunity of learning it. The Continental Congress had no control over them, and they came and went as they wished at critical times. It is no wonder that Washington's patience was exhausted. The wonder is that they accomplished as much as they did, for under proper leadership they accomplished much. During this period they fought the Battle of Bunker Hill, where twice they rolled back the charge of the British regulars, and would have defeated them in the third attack had not their ammunition given out. Alone, against regulars, they won the Battle of Bennington, which made a failure of Burgoyne's expedition. They gathered around him, cut off his supplies, and, at the Battle of Saratoga, their charges broke the spirit of his army until it surrendered. Their part in the Battle of Cowpens, one of the most brilliant victories of the Revolution, was most creditable.

Alone they marched against and defeated the Indians. Alone they won the Battle of Kings Mountain, all under the most adverse circumstances. It is not too much to say that without their aid the Revolution could not have succeeded.

The record of the militia, however, in the War of 1812 has been specially singled out as being discreditable. Here again history has been perverted from its true conclusions. The facts are that the administration which undertook to carry on the War of 1812 was thoroughly incompetent and inefficient in a military way. The Commander in Chief of the Army, a Regular officer, was known to be incompetent, was accused of being a coward, and after the war was proved to be a traitor. We never had any success on land in the War of 1812 until in the North a militia general by the name of Brown took command, and in the South another militia general by the well-known name of Jackson assumed command. The first defeat, and one of the most disgraceful occasions of the war, the surrender of Detroit, was made by an officer of the Regular Army against the protests of the militia and the militia officers under him. The most disgraceful occasion—perhaps I ought to say the most discreditable occasion, to use the term of the historian Adams—of the whole War of 1812 was the Battle of Chrystler's Farm, in which on our side were engaged about 2,000, all Regulars; on the other side about 800 British regulars and Canadians, altogether; and our troops were entirely defeated.

It is not strange that the militia of 1812 often failed. Their drill was often a mere farce, as the national authorities paid no attention to the discipline of the men or the training of their officers. Some of the State governments did not sympathize with the war. This encouraged insubordination and refusal to go beyond our boundaries. As a rule they were hastily assembled from the farms or towns and sent into battle half equipped, half clothed, and sometimes half starved. This was their condition when they were defeated and captured at the River Raisin. They had gone into battle in the middle of winter, with a heavy snow on the ground, with nothing but summer clothing and some coarse blankets wrapped around them. Although these men surrendered at that battle, there was really there the finest material in the world for an army if the War Department at that time had known how to use it. Those who are opposed to the militia are fond of relating the story of the defeat which occurred near this city at Bladensburg, which caused this city to fall into the hands of the British.

They forget that Regular troops participated in this battle, if it may be called such, with little, if any, more credit than the militia. They forget that confusion worse confounded reigned at the Capital; that without any plan and without any organization the militia had been hurriedly summoned to the defense of the Capital, and were finally hastily rushed to the battle ground, where they ought to have been weeks before behind strong fortifications. What could be expected under such circumstances, with the general in command issuing one set of orders, the Secretary of War another, and the President another, and nearly every order wrong? What else could be expected but defeat, and a discreditable defeat, when a mere mob was opposed to veteran regular troops, such as composed Gen. Ross's army? The fault was not with the militia, but with the military mismanagement of the administration, which, however successful in peace, was utterly incompetent to conduct a war.

The only organization which acquitted itself with any credit in the affair at Bladensburg consisted of the sailors under Commodore Barney, who fought too long and remained at their post with the battery they served until some were bayonetted at their guns by the British grenadiers. The real truth about the service of the militia in the War of 1812 was that, like the Regulars in the beginning, they were badly commanded, badly drilled, badly supplied, and confusion and error prevailed in all ranks, until at last, through the bitter lesson of defeat, we learned the way to victory.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman has just spoken of Gen. Jackson at the Battle of New Orleans. Is it not a fact the militia under Gen. Jackson won that battle against the flower of the British Army that had just succeeded in Europe in defeating the armies of Napoleon, and they were trained soldiers, every one of them?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is entirely correct. I was coming to that. There were a few Regular troops under Jackson, and only a few, and the battle was gained by the militia forces, mostly Tennesseeans and Kentuckians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will recall that Gen. Houston, in the Battle of San Jacinto in Texas in the revolution against Mexico, defeated the splendid army of Santa Anna with just about one Texan to three Mexicans, and was not that one of the decisive victories on which the war turned?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is quite correct; but Texas was not at that time a part of the United States, although immigrants from this country made up the force of Gen. Houston.

It was the militia also which won the Battle of the Thames. But I have not time to enumerate all the battles in which the militia distinguished themselves. In our Civil War we had only a few regiments of militia and very few Regulars. The Army of the Potomac had one division—that of Sykes's—which was mostly composed of Regulars. The Army of the West had no Regulars whatever. The Regulars distinguished themselves in this war, but no more than did the Volunteer commands, which were, in fact, the militia. Some of them went into battle after only having been organized and drilled for a few weeks and acquitted themselves with as much courage, as was shown by the losses they sustained, as ever did any Regular troops exhibit upon the field of battle.

There has been criticism also of the conduct of our militia force during our War with Spain.

It is true we have much to learn both in the Regular and Militia Establishments from the War with Spain. From the experience of that campaign we ought to be able to mobilize both the Regulars and the militia more successfully and to better protect our soldiers from disease. It is not at all to our credit that there ever existed such a pest hole as the military camp at Chickamaugua, nor can we take any satisfaction in its hospital record. There hundreds of fine young men were broken by disease and far too many found their death, although the sanitary and hospital regulations were wholly under the direction of Regular officers.

The militia in the War with Spain were put at a great disadvantage. They were armed with guns using black powder, the smoke of which made them an especial target for the enemy. But in this war, as in all others, they never failed when properly led, and in the war with the Philippines a regiment from my own State and also regiments from Kansas, Nebraska, and other States have a splendid record and distinguished themselves greatly, notwithstanding the disadvantages in which they lived. There is no need for an apology for the militia on account of the Spanish War, but we should make use of the experience of that war for the training, drilling, and future establishment of our militia forces. [Applause.] The lessons of that war are valuable and should not be forgotten either by the Regulars or the militia.

I need not say that the militia of the present day is superior to that which participated in the Spanish War. It has learned much from it, and at last the General Government is also learning that it must oversee the discipline of the National Guard and the training of its officers as authorized by the Constitution. In this connection let me say that it has been asserted on this floor that the militia can not shoot. I have investigated this matter and find that the real fact is just the contrary. The rifle teams of the militia have everywhere beaten the Regulars and the Marines. They have beaten them at long distance, they have beaten them at short distance, and beaten them at rapid fire. A militia team won the all-American championship from the Canadians and the militia qualified to furnish more than their quota for the American rifle team that participated in the Olympic games and won the world's championship. Some one stated that this was just the officers. No, Mr. Chairman, it was an Iowa blacksmith or farmer—for the moment I have forgotten which—that surpassed them all, although the militia officers made fine records, and, of course, ought to be experts in order to train inexperienced men when received for instruction.

As now organized, drilled, and commanded, I believe that the militia is not only capable of rendering excellent service but that in it we have the material for the finest soldiers in the world. I was opposed to the Chamberlain bill principally because, through the volunteer army which was to be created by that bill, it was intended eventually to do away with the militia. I was also opposed to it because if it was fully carried out it would have created a total force in the Regular Army, Volunteer Army, and National Guard of about 1,000,000 men, all under pay in time of peace—a number which, I think, is wholly unnecessary. I favored the provisions for the pay of the militia in the new Army bill, for it can not be expected that either officers or men should lose the time necessary for training and also, in the case of officers at least, be put to large expense without any recompense whatever, and even when paid the militia will not cost us one-third what a regular force of the same number would require us to expend. Although the bill which we passed, which provides for over 200,000 men in the Regular Establishment and 425,000 in the National Guard, in time of peace it will not cost into $100,000,000 per annum as much as the establishment contemplated by the Chamberlain bill. Even in these days $100,000,000 is worth considering, and I wish to remind the House that if we do not exercise some care and restriction over our military expenditures it will not be long before they will exceed the total which our Government is now expending for all purposes whatever.

I know there is criticism also with reference to the officers of the militia. I can not speak for the militia officers as a whole, but I know a number of these young men who are in command in the militia. They are not only men of exceptional character, but of exceptional ability. Of course, it would be idle for anyone to claim that a troop which had only a few months of drill would be able to execute complicated maneuvers with the same skill as soldiers who had been drilled for years. It would be absurd to claim that an officer who had only devoted part of his time to the mastery of the art of war could have obtained that knowledge which is received by one who devotes a lifetime to this profession. But the militia always has been and always will be a powerful arm of defense for this Nation. As the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said last Saturday, our chief defense must be the volunteers, the citizen soldiery of the Nation. What they may lack because of inexperience they will in the end make up in knowledge, devotion, and patriotism. If our Navy is properly maintained, time will be given for perfection of discipline and training before they will be called upon to meet any force from across the sea. No finer examples of the patriot soldier can be found in all history than among the militia. It was a militia soldier, Dr. Warren, who said as he fell at Bunker Hill, that it was sweet to die for his country. Nathan Hale, who said when he was led to the scaffold that his only regret was that he had not more lives to give to his country, was a militia soldier. Thousands upon thousands of the patriots who fell in our Civil War but give renewed force to the assertion that nowhere can more valor be found than has been shown among the ranks of our citizen soldiery. Give to the National Guard the support and confidence to which it is entitled and it will not fail us. With the Regulars as a foundation, we shall be able, through the militia, to quickly build a force which can not only repel any attack upon us, but compel respect for our flag and the property and lives of our citizens throughout the world. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a very brief statement. The estimates on which this bill is based amount to $147,964,934.93. The appropriations for the current year for similar purposes provided in this bill amount to $134,055,733.48. The bill appropriates $127,237,221.24. This sum is $20,727,713.69 less than the estimates submitted to the committee in the consideration of the bill. The total appropriations made for the fiscal year 1916, for objects for which appropriations are provided in the accompanying bill, amount to $134,000,000, which includes $126,000.000 in the sundry civil act, $50,000 in a special act, and $7,000,000 in deficiency acts. The sundry civil appropriation bill covers such a wide range of subjects that it is difficult if not almost impossible to make within any reasonable time a comprehensive statement which will review all of the activities for which provision is made.

There are some items in the bill of very considerable importance, and to which perhaps it may be necessary to make reference subsequently during the consideration of the bill. One matter to which attention will be called, and it seems to me perhaps it will be preferable to make a statement relative to the matter later on in the consideration of the bill, is the provision for armories and arsenals in the United States. The estimates submitted for the armories and arsenals are exceeded by the recommendations contained in this bill by $3,032,775. This additional sum was incorporated in the bill for certain purposes which the committee itself originated. It is stated it would require an expenditure of about $75,000,000 to enable the United States Government to manufacture the munitions and the materials required for the Army in time of war. It is quite apparent that Congress would not be willing to authorize an investment of so large a sum in plants of various character which could not be utilized unless this country were engaged in a very extensive contest with some great power.

The committee, however, made a very complete investigation of the various arsenals and armories now maintained by the United States, and as a result of that inquiry recommended certain expenditures at some of the armories and arsenals in addition to those expenditures for which estimates had been submitted, in order that the establishments which the Government now maintains might be utilized to the best advantage. The expenditure of this money, it is believed, will not only equip the present armories and arsenals in a manner that will be satisfactory, but will give to the Government certain advantages in checking up the cost of material to be obtained from private manufacturers. When the items in the bill relative to armories and arsenals are reached I shall be glad, if necessary, to make a more detailed statement as to just what is recommended by the committee for the information of the House. At a time like the present, Mr. Chairman, when very extraordinary demands are necessarily made upon the Treasury for large expenditures, the committee endeavored to adopt a policy that would provide liberally for those things that were essential for the national defense and to defer to a later day some matters that, while somewhat desirable from many standpoints, could not be said to be imperative in their nature. That accounts to some extent for the fact that the estimates as submitted by the department have been reduced in the preparation of this bill on the face of the bill as it appears $20,000,000, but actually in a sum aggregating $24,000,000. Although this reduction is made in the amounts asked by the various departments, I am quite confident that no service of the Government will be materially affected by the failure to include the additional $20,000,000 in this bill.

I shall wait until a later time to make any further statement in connection with the particular items, and unless some gentleman desires to ask a question will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask a question for information, and not by way of criticism, because I have full confidence in the chairman of the committee and am ready to vote for the bill without reading it, knowing that he made it.

I would like to ask for information in regard to the Federal Trade Commission, for which I see you have appropriated $250,000 and have provided for about 90 employees in the bill, and allowed about $100,000 to pay other people for indefinite work. Will the chairman kindly state what the work of the Federal Trade Commission has been, and what is contemplated, in view of the appropriation asked for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Federal Trade Commission took over the work of the Bureau of Corporations. The gentleman is familiar with the character and nature of that work?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That work has been continued during the present fiscal year, as it was in the past. In addition the Federal Trade Commission was organized for the purpose of eliminating a great many abuses that were supposed and alleged to exist in the conduct of business. There is a delicate line dividing the work that should be done by the Federal Trade Commission from the work that should be done by the Department of Justice in the enforcement of the antitrust law. The Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice have reached an understanding as to the division of work.

Numerous complaints have been filed with the Federal Trade Commission about unfair practices by various business concerns. When these complaints are filed inquiry is made, and it is stated that in a number of instances when the matter complained of has been called to the attention of the offending corporation it has been adjusted. The policy has been to work in harmony and cooperation with the various business enterprises of the country, and where practices have been called to the attention of the Federal Trade Commission which, apparently, are now prohibited by law, instead of initiating at once a prosecution under the antitrust act the attention of the concern affected is invited to the situation and in a great many instances the difficulties of which complaint is made have been eliminated. In some cases, where the corporations have ignored the invitation of the Federal Trade Commission to confer for the purpose of eliminating matters about which complaint has been made, resort has then been had to the procedure provided by law. These complaints are very numerous, and before the commission acts it is necessary to make some preliminary investigation to ascertain whether there be any justification for the complaint. Otherwise concerns conducting business legitimately would be subjected to continual annoyance by Federal officials inquiring and interfering with their business. The purpose is to avoid, if possible, the unnecessary harassment of business enterprises and to direct the attention of the concern complained of to the matter about which the complaint is made only when it appears that there are some legitimate grounds for complaint.

In the last session of Congress, when provision was made for the Federal Trade Commission, it was believed that between the time Congress adjourned and reconvened the commission would be very largely engaged in a study of conditions and in planning an organization. They could not tell offhand what was to be done, but it was desirable that a careful survey be made of the entire business world. So that a definite plan has been formulated and a definite policy agreed upon. Congress did not provide for all the funds and employees desired by the commission for the past year. That preliminary stage has been passed. The commission has formulated its plans. It has determined upon a definite policy, and these appropriations are recommended in the belief that the sums provided here will enable the commission in a reasonable way to enlarge its activities and to discharge satisfactorily the obligations imposed upon it.

Mr. HILL. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for the information which he gives. I happened to attend a hearing of the Federal Trade Commission at Los Angeles last fall, and found them busily engaged in trying to devise some way by which the law against combinations and trusts could be violated outside of the United States and at the same time observed inside of the United States; in other words, recognizing the value of combination in foreign trade, but disclaiming it in this country. I would like to ask one more question, not in regard to this matter, but in regard to another matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman was perhaps a little thoughtless in choosing his words when he said they were trying to find some way to violate the law outside of the United States.

Mr. HILL. That seemed to be the line of the questions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think an effort has been made to find some way to observe the law everywhere and at the same time to conduct business both within and without the United States in as successful and prosperous a manner as possible.

Mr. HILL. In my total ignorance of this bill—this is the first time I have seen it—may I ask whether any provision is made for the Federal Reserve Board? The expenses of that board are entirely paid by the national banks of the country, as I understand it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a permanent appropriation which makes certain provisions for the Federal Reserve Board. That appropriation is not carried by this or any other annual appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. Is it a permanent appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a permanent appropriation.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman remember how much it is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The banks pay for it all.

Mr. HILL. That is as I supposed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is certain work which is done by appropriations from the Treasury.

Mr. HILL. But there is nothing carried in this or any other appropriation bill to meet the expenses of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Except in so far as appropriations are made for the maintenance of the Treasury Building, where the Federal Reserve Board is located, which might be said to be appropriated for indirectly. Outside of such appropriations there are none at all.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I notice that this bill carries items for the fortification of the Panama Canal. Will the gentleman explain why those items are carried in this bill instead of in the general fortification bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the determination was reached to fortify the canal it was believed that it would be better to have all the appropriations for the canal in one bill, and so the fortification appropriations for the canal have been carried in the sundry civil with the other canal appropriations as a matter of convenience in keeping track and keeping the work more readily within the direct control of those who are more immediately concerned in canal appropriations. They were somewhat intertwined and it was thought better to carry them in this bill. The Committee on Appropriations has examined into the matters on the Canal Zone, and it was of considerable advantage while in the Canal Zone and making these inquiries that the appropriations were all carried in one bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss the sundry civil bill in general debate, but owing to the illness of the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and his inability to be here, it has seemed to me that it is proper and fitting that some member of the minority should express briefly the views of the minority touching the provisions of the bill.

The chairman of the committee has called your attention to the fact that the committee in reporting the bill brings in a measure that while it is large in the aggregate is much below the aggregate of the estimates, and that in spite of the fact that the committee has recommended appropriations considerably in excess of the estimates. To reduce appropriations upward of $20,000,000 below the estimates and still reasonably provide for the public service, assuming that the estimates are not carelessly made, requires intelligent action and discriminating attention to every item.

There are a number of items in this bill which, in my opinion, might very properly have been increased. There were estimates made that were not allowed that, in my opinion, should have been allowed out of due regard for the proper development, expansion, and growth of the public service. And yet I want to say this for the subcommittee and the committee, that the bill, while it is closely trimmed and thoroughly pruned, does, in the main, care for the public service, and that it can not be said with regard to any item I now have in mind that the public service will be seriously crippled by reason of the reduction of the items carried in the bill below the estimates.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I am thirsting for information this morning, and I am glad to have two so good gentlemen as the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Wyoming to answer the questions. I notice that the bill carries $127,000,000. In 1914 the bill carried $124,000,000. The next year it carried $130,000,00, and the next year $134,000,000. The year 1914 was certainly before the war began in Europe. The question I would like to ask in regard to this bill is whether this bill is any larger by reason of existing conditions abroad than it would have been if no such conditions existed. In other words, is there any extraordinary emergency appropriation, or is this, as the gentleman stated a moment ago, for the current service of the Government?

What I want to know is this: Is there anything in this bill which would justify an increased emergency taxation by and by, or is it the ordinary current expenses of the Government? I will supplement the question by asking the gentleman another question, knowing that he is perfectly familiar with the working of the committee, to which he belongs—whether any appropriation bill, aside perhaps from the fortifications bill, that has come from his committee carries any items which for the current expenses of this fiscal year would justify an increased taxation because of conditions in Europe?

Mr. MONDELL. I think I can answer the last question by saying no. To answer the gentleman's other questions more in detail, this bill does carry items of appropriation in the sum of something over $2,000,000 for arsenals, for a new powder factory, and for increases in the buildings and machinery at arsenals which it probably would not have carried except for the conditions in Europe.

On the other hand, in the trimming and pruning process which was carried on by the fine Italian hand of the chairman of the committee, many an item, in my opinion—and I am simply expressing my opinion—was reduced below what it would have been except for the fact that conditions in Europe and conditions of the public mind have demanded larger appropriations for other purposes, and the condition of the Treasury demands a saving somewhere. This bill was trimmed, in my opinion, very much below what it would have carried in excess of the two million increase to which I have referred, for the reasons referred to. So that, answering the gentleman's question more in detail, I would say the sundry civil bill is not larger than it would have been otherwise except for the conditions abroad, but is much smaller than it would have been had we been living under conditions of world-wide peace.

Mr. HILL. That is just what I supposed.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, preparedness and appropriations made in its name, considered in connection with the condition of the Treasury, have resulted in impressing the Committee on Appropriations with the necessity of scrutinizing closely every item of appropriation and in keeping the items just as low as they can be kept without actually crippling the public service.

Mr. HILL. I am not asking these questions in the way of criticism, but I want to know, and I want the country to know, whether the authorizations that have been made and for which I voted in the Navy and the Army have been simply authorizations because of the expenditures next year and the year after and the year after that or whether they have been of such a character as to require increased taxation this year.

Mr. MONDELL. Whatever may be true with regard to other bills, my opinion is, and I think I am fairly familiar with it, that the bill would have carried several million dollars more than it does carry, except for the fact that the committee felt that in view of the largely increased appropriations for war purposes——

Mr. HILL. Authorizations, the gentleman means—not appropriations.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, appropriations and authorizations for war purposes, it was necessary to keep these items as low as possible.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is asking specifically whether any items have been included in this bill made necessary by the disturbance in Europe. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] answered that, with the exception of the arsenal appropriations, probably no direct appropriations for that purpose are included. But the gentleman will concede that all of the estimates of the various departments were affected by the increased price of materials that they were compelled to pay, occasioned by the disturbance in Europe. The increase in each one of the estimates when it was explained was justified upon the ground that material had been affected by that condition.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will permit, I will concede that the war in Europe has had an effect on prices, of course, but the gentleman himself must concede that for the last 10 years there has been a constant increase of prices, marked and distinct, and that that existed before the war in Europe began.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. For more than 10 years.

Mr. HILL. And that as long as that goes on the effect will be shown in the appropriation bills, but he can not lay it all to the war in Europe.

Mr. BORLAND. No. I call the gentleman's attention to this, and this is something totally distinct from that. Take, for instance, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, to use a concrete illustration. They showed that their coloring matter for colored ink had increased, I think, 400 per cent.

Mr. HILL. I think that is true.

Mr. BORLAND. On account of the shortage in dyestuffs.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion along that line?

Mr. BORLAND. I am not going into all the details, because it would be impossible, or into the printing-ink and dyestuffs business, but I simply wanted to show the gentleman that in that particular, and in a great many other similar particulars, increased estimates are justified upon the ground that materials have increased in that particular line.

Mr. HILL. I think that is true, and I think Director Ralph is entitled to a great deal of credit for anticipating the situation and getting his supplies as low as he did, and I also think that Congress is greatly to blame for having neglected to pass some remedial legislation when the matter was brought to their attention last December, for nothing has been done about it.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, Congress has taken care of that situation as quickly as it could.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] for calling attention to the fact that the sum total of this bill has been increased by reason of the left-handed way in which his party has kept its promise to reduce the cost of living.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. We were lambasted by the gentleman's party in its last national platform and at sundry and divers times during the campaign which followed upon the proposition that we were responsible as a party for the advancing cost of products, and we were assured that if the Democracy was given an opportunity and a turn at the wheel there would be a change in this condition of affairs. We were all going to be able to live more cheaply and get the things we needed at a lower price. The gentleman calls attention to the fact that that promise has been kept in the usual Democratic fashion. I recall that old promise made by the Democrats away back in the silver compaign in 1896, in which, going through my country, they promised the farmers that under the Democratic administration there would be no more 85-cent wheat. And, alas, there was not, for it went down to 67 cents. In the same way their promise to reduce the cost of living and the cost of products is fulfilled in the boosting of them as they get into the hands of the ultimate consumer, whether the producer gets any more than he did or not. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask what effect this vast amount of money that we are spending on preparedness has had on public buildings and other improvements, especially public buildings, as a lot are carried in this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it has had any effect one way or the other on the public buildings, so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman referred to the Democratic platform as saying something about the cost of living. To which platform does the gentleman have reference?

Mr. MONDELL. Which Democratic platform?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I refer to the one that has had so many of its planks smashed—so much so that it would be difficult at this time to recognize it. So far the Democrats have not had time to demolish any of the planks of the new platform, but the gentleman will recall that my friend from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] the other day made the remarkable plea in behalf of his party that, having smashed all of the planks of their platform, practically, and ignored those they had not smashed, they were entitled to great consideration, to the thanks of the American people, and a continuance in power, because they had, he said, in a way, carried out a large number of the promises of the Republican platform.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I have the last Democratic platform in my hand, and I do not see anything in it about reducing the high cost of living now. There is no reference to the effect of the tariff on the cost of living or any pledge to reduce it in this platform.

Mr. MONDELL. The silence of the last Democratic platform on that subject is fairly howling. I now yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Well, I desired a hearing on the question of the last Democratic platform. I had read it with a great deal of care, and I did not find any reference whatever to the reduction of the high cost of living. I presume we will have to refer this to the last platform and the "lastest" platform.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, that is one of the things that our friends desire to forget and to have the people forget. Now, with regard to the amount in which the items in this bill are increased by reason of the war increase in prices, the matter raised by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], it is true there are some items in the bill, not numerous, not amounting to very considerable sums in the aggregate, in my opinion, where the appropriation is increased by reason of the increase in prices caused directly by the war, but those cases are not numerous, and in the aggregate they do not amount to a very great amount. The general increase in the cost of things which may or may not be because of the war, directly or indirectly, has added something to the amount carried in a number of items in the bill. This bill, however, is more largely for salaries and wages than for products, and they have not been increased.

Mr. HILL. On that point, what is the gentleman's idea as to the amount of increase in this appropriation bill because of such additional items?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, it might amount to a fraction of 1 per cent.

Mr. HILL. That is what I had supposed. Will the gentleman kindly answer another question? When were these estimates made?

Mr. MONDELL. These estimates are supposed to be in in October.

Mr. HILL. Of last year?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HILL. The reason I asked the question is because while I was at home last week I was advised that the amendments for the increase of the Navy did not include the increased cost of materials because of the war, and that it would be impossible to have those estimates carried out and ships built now for anywhere like the appropriation which was made for that purpose, the estimates having been made so long ago and having been made on the old basis of prices. Whether that is being carried out through all the appropriation bills or not I did not know, and that is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. MONDELL. Reference has been made to the fact that in the matter of arsenals and armories the bill carries more than $2,000,000 above the estimates. That action was taken by the committee because it developed in the hearings that some arsenals and armories were not at the present time very well balanced in their manufacture; that they could produce considerable more of one kind of material, or one part of a certain instrument of war, than another, and it seemed wise to increase the arsenals and armories with a view of balancing their output. Then the committee was of the opinion that it would be wise to provide for a new powder factory, and in view of the fact that we are proposing in the fortification bill to build larger guns than heretofore, particularly mobile guns, it was deemed wise to make provision in a Government arsenal for the manufacture of those large guns. The committee was of opinion that we should provide in Government arsenals or armories for the manufacture of at least a portion of all the munitions of war the Government needs, and those increases were made with a view of carrying out that idea. The bill, in the opinion of the minority, has been carefully scrutinized. As I said, the public service, if I may except a few items, will not seriously suffer by reason of the reduction in the amount carried in the bill below the estimates. It is a matter of regret, however, that conditions are such that the committee did not feel justified in extending the public service in a manner commensurate with the growth and development of the country. With a treasury nearly empty, increased demands in the name of preparedness, the question as to whether it will be possible to raise the needed funds without extraordinary revenues burdensome on the people—all those things influenced the committee to trim the bill to the lowest possible point that would not actually cripple the governmental operations. In the main the committee did not feel justified in occupying new fields, even though provided for by legislation, extending services except here and there where the necessity was so urgent that it could not be denied. In the main this is a bill drawn to meet the absolute needs of the public service and without those increases that there should be to meet the requirements of the civil service of a great people growing in numbers and in wealth and expanding in commerce and industry and of a Government which is constantly occupying new fields of endeavor, of enterprise, of research, and of regulation.

Some day it is hoped, and in the no distant future, we believe, that we will have a condition of the Treasury under which it will not be necessary to be continually watching the ticker of Government revenues and every morning balancing the available cash in the Treasury before deciding whether or not we are justified in providing adequately for necessary, useful, and helpful public services. Those were conditions under which we operated for a good many years under Republican rule in the House. Then the question was not, Is there a dime in the Treasury with which to pay, or have we the funds with which to meet this situation; but, rather, Is this an expenditure in the public interest, necessary, vital, or, at least, important in the carrying out of governmental activities along the lines that have been wisely marked out and undertaken by legislation? Unfortunately, we are not able to view appropriations from that standpoint under a Democratic administration. It seems to be a normal condition, under the administration of our friends on the other side, that we must constantly clip off, reduce, and trim the appropriations for governmental services; and yet they persist in making appropriations for questionable purposes to an extent that keeps the public expenditures constantly increasing.

While I am on this question of the increased cost of living, let me refer to just one matter in connection with this bill. The lump-sum appropriations carried in the bill provide for many thousands of people, many of whom are paid very small salaries and low wages. I am not particularly worried about the people who are receiving salaries of $2,500, $3,000, $4,000, $5,000, or $6,000, and from that on up, though I realize everyone feels the grip of increased living costs, but there is a serious situation when you consider the people paid under this bill who are receiving from $600 to $1,000. The cost of living has so advanced in the last three years as to make it very trying for such people; and yet it is impossible for the departments to pay them more in the majority of cases, owing to a provision of law that no increase shall be made in compensation over the sum formerly paid for the same kind of work. There are thousands of employments provided for in this bill that ought to be increased. Many of the lump sums carried in the bill should be increased in order to provide for those people, with regard to whom I can not, I confess, understand how they manage to live under present conditions with the wage they are receiving. Some of these receive wages below those paid by private employers in the same class of work. That is not true in every case, but it is true in some of the cases of these low-paid employments. I am hoping that when this bill is reported next year to a Republican Congress it may be reported with every activity of the Federal Government liberally provided for, and with amounts carried in it which will make possible the increase of the salary and wages paid to at least the low-paid employees of the Federal Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fort Wayne, Ind., post office: For mail-conveying machinery, $5,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to return to page 6 in order to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT). Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 2, insert the following:
"Caruthersville, Mo., post office: For site, $250."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this estimate came in recently and is in the same category with the other items of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose that all of these items in reference to public buildings are authorized by law, as are the items for the machinery, perhaps, like this item, and all estimated for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. All authorized by law and all estimated for and carry the sums which the department states will be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

McComb, Miss., post office: For continuation, $19,000.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, this refers to a building for which $50,000 has been authorized. I should like to ask the chairman when the balance will be paid. When will we get the $26,000 to complete the building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The limit of cost of this building is $50,000. There has already been appropriated $11,000 and the department requests $19,000 at this time, as that is as much money as it can use before the next bill carrying these appropriations becomes a law. Unless some extraordinary situation arises the balance of the money will in all probability be appropriated at the next session of Congress.

Mr. QUIN. They will get it just as fast as the building needs it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just as fast as they require it, money will be provided.

Mr. QUIN. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yoakum, Tex., post office: For continuation, $25,000.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAY). The gentleman from Utah offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, insert a new paragraph after line 16, as follows:
"Park City, Utah, post office: To increase the limit of cost and for completion, $28,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, in 1908 a post office building was authorized for Park City, Utah, at a cost of $25,000. In May, 1910, the limit of cost was increased to $30,000. The site has been purchased at $7,000, leaving $23,000 available for the construction of a building. The Supervising Architect has prepared plans for the building, and finds that it is impossible to construct it according to the plans which he has made, for less than $28,000. There is a bill before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds providing for the increase of the limit of cost by $5,000. Inasmuch as this building was first authorized over eight years ago, and is being now held up for an authorization of an increase of $5,000 in the limit of cost in order to go ahead with the work, I have offered this amendment. It seems to me a very meritorious one. The building has been delayed one year after another until eight years have passed since the building was first authorized. The plans are all ready, waiting the necessary funds to go forward with the building. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the committee, might well withdraw the point of order under the circumstances in this particular case. There is no question but that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will report a bill authorizing this increase; but then it will be too late to secure the necessary appropriation to proceed with the work of construction this season. It is a small matter, and the whole building has been held up, because the Supervising Architect has not been able to let the contract within the limit of cost authorized by law, and has submitted to Congress a request for the increase I am asking. We are asking for only $5,000 additional in order to go forward with construction according to the plans that are already prepared. If this amendment is adopted, the building can be constructed this season. Everything is in perfect readiness to begin construction, and the appropriation of the money authorized is all that is necessary to secure the prompt erection of the building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is not authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOWELL. I move to amend by making the amount $23,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOWELL: Page 26, insert a new paragraph after line 16, as follows:
"Park City, Utah, post office: For completion, $23,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, this was authorized eight years ago. The plans are all prepared, and it seems to me that that community is entitled to have this building erected at some time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The authorization for a public building at this place is $30,000. Seven thousand dollars have already been appropriated, and the department does not need and has not requested any additional appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The department have asked for $5,000 additional. If we do not make any appropriation now, probably they will get that additional amount at some time. Is it not advisable to let the department go ahead and complete the building under the authorization, without any increase?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They will not do that.

Mr. MANN. It is their business to do it. They are required to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But these requests for increases in cost are usually made at the instance of gentlemen interested in the buildings. The department does not make these requests unless either a Member of this House or of the other House asks to have the work suspended.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am saying. Here now the gentleman is willing to take the building under the limit of cost. The building is held up. Why not allow it to be completed under the limit of cost instead of waiting and letting them get an additional amount?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This will not help the gentleman any. Bids were invited upon plans which have been prepared. All of the bids submitted are in excess of the limit of cost. The mere appropriation of this money will not aid the gentleman, because the plans must be revised, new proposals advertised, and new bids obtained; so that even if this appropriation were made at this time, no advance would be made in the work. If this practice were adopted, what would happen would be that in a great many instances, where money could not be used by the department, appropriations would be made and lie there to the credit of the project without any advantage or value. The committee has pursued the course that has been the policy of Congress for years. Wherever a building is authorized and the department is in a position to use money during the coming fiscal year and an estimate for the appropriation is made the appropriation is recommended. No appropriation is ever carried for a building unless the request is made in the form of an estimate. No estimate is made for this building. The department has not asked for the money, does not want the money, could not use it if it got it; and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. HOWELL. The gentleman from New York is entirely in error in stating that the construction of this building is held up at the request of any member of the Utah delegation. It was held up for the reason that, as stated by the Treasury Department, drawings were prepared and two proposals were obtained in May, 1915, for the construction of the building, but the amount of the lower proposal exceeded that available for a contract by the sum of $2,860. The proposals were therefore rejected. It is very improbable that as low a bid as that previously submitted would be received on readvertising this work, and it is therefore believed that in order to award a contract for the construction of the building as designed, an increase in the present limit of cost of not less than $5,000 will be necessary. The building has been held up by the Supervising Architect. I now propose to make the necessary appropriation to complete the building at the cost originally provided for and let the Supervising Architect make his plans accordingly. As suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], it seems to me this would be an economy, instead of waiting for a year or two on an appropriation for the inevitable increase that will finally be granted. A site has been purchased at a cost of $7,000, and everything ready to go forward with the building this season and let the Government get the benefit of its use.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no advantage in appropriating money for something that can not be done.

Mr. HOWELL. No member of the Utah delegation asked for the holding up of this building. It has been done at the request of the department, because they wanted $5,000 more than what has been authorized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They will not get it.

Mr. HOWELL. I am now proposing to appropriate simply the amount that has been authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARANTINE STATIONS.

Boston quarantine station: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept, free of cost to the United States, the transfer of the Boston quarantine station and hereafter to operate the same as one of the quarantine stations of the Public Health Service.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph, my point of order being that the Secretary of the Treasury can not accept free of cost to the United States without special legislation anything of this sort.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GALLIVAN: Page 27, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Boston quarantine station: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept, at a cost to the United States of not to exceed $150,000, the transfer of the Boston quarantine station and hereafter to operate the same as one of the quarantine stations of the Public Health Service."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. I may not consume all that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, two years ago the Federal authorities took up with the authorities of the city of Boston the question of transferring the quarantine station at Gallups Island, Boston Harbor, under the act passed February 15, 1893, entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," section 8 of which reads as follows:

SEC. 8. That whenever the proper authorities of a State shall surrender to the United States the use of the buildings and disinfecting apparatus at a State quarantine station the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to receive them and to pay a reasonable compensation to the State for their use if, in his opinion, they are necessary to the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on April 13, 1915, the City Council of Boston passed the following resolution authorizing the mayor to enter into an agreement with the Federal Government of the maritime quarantine station at Gallups Island, Boston Harbor, for Federal control:

1. Ordered, That his honor the mayor be, and is hereby, authorized, in the name and behalf of the city, to execute an agreement with the United States of America for the use by said United States of the island in Boston Harbor known as Gallups Island, together with the buildings thereon and all other property used in connection with the quarantine service hitherto performed by the city.

Said agreement shall provide for the execution of a lease from the city to the United States of said island and property, said lease to continue until the execution of a deed conveying said island and property from the city to the United States. The mayor is hereby authorized to execute, in the name and behalf of the city, the lease and the deed aforesaid and all other instruments which may be necessary to transfer from the city to the United States title and control of said island and property upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the mayor and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and upon the further condition that the United States shall, upon reasonable terms and conditions, receive for treatment upon said island persons afflicted with smallpox or other quarantinable diseases who may be sent thereto by the city of Boston: Provided, however, That said lease, said deed, and any other instrument to be executed as aforesaid shall not be valid until approved by vote of the city council. (Finally passed Apr. 13, 1915.)

It appears that after a conference the mayor of Boston and the Secretary of the Treasury entered into an agreement for the lease of the quarantine property at a nominal consideration of $1 per year pending an appropriation by Congress for the purchase of the station by the Federal Government. The Public Health Service thereupon assumed operation of the quarantine station, and a representative of the Supervising Architect's Office was designated to act with a representative of the city of Boston in making an appraisal of the value of Gallups Island building thereon. After careful consideration these representatives submitted an itemized account and agreed upon a flat sum of $150,000 to be paid to the city of Boston.

Not long ago estimates by the Treasury Department were submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and the committee was asked to appropriate this $150,000 that is due the city of Boston for these quarters at Gallups Island. I am told that there was some misunderstanding among the members of the subcommittee as to the authority of the Treasury Department to enter into any such contract. I have read the law which authorizes the Treasury Department, and I have here precedents, some of them of very recent date, and I will read a few of them.

Quarantine stations were purchased by the Federal Government at Savannah, Ga., in 1901 for $20,000. In 1903 the Federal Government took over the entire Florida system and paid $64,450. In 1907, Mobile, Ala., was taken over at a cost of $18,000, and as recently as 1909 New Orleans was taken over at a cost to the Government of $100,000, which was paid, and the Government is now operating the quarantine stations at New Orleans.

Mr. Chairman, the advantages of Federal control are many and varied. May I summarize them briefly for the benefit of the committee?

1. Uniformity: The origin of Federal quarantine was the necessity for unifying the various regulations at the different ports of the United States.

2. Simplicity: Economy for the shipping interests in that one set of rules applies at all ports.

3. Flexibility: Special requirements are made for any port, according to need, and the national regulations are so drawn as to allow great discretionary powers on the part of individual quarantine officers, thereby avoiding rigidity.

4. Training: Officers are trained at the quarantine stations and at the Hygienic Laboratory of the Public Health Service at Washington.

5. Information: Consular reports from all foreign countries to the Public Health Service, with free use of cable when necessary.

6. Nonpolitical: Appointments in the Public Health Service are for life, dependent upon good behavior and efficient service. This is essential to scientific progress. Permanent appointments for quarantine work insures an accumulation of experience.

7. International sanitary treaties: The United States is a signatory of two international sanitary treaties, under which are operated the international quarantine regulations, which are subject to revision every two years, in order to keep apace with scientific advance.

8. Precedents: Sixty-seven State and local quarantine stations have already been transferred.

9. Quarantine a national function: All immigrants entering the United States are examined by Public Health Service officers, and all persons, whether immigrants or incoming passengers, are examined for quarantine purposes at all ports in the United States, save at Baltimore.

10. Arrangements for boarding are made to suit the needs of the port.

11. Facilities: Equipment is provided in fixed relation to the amount of commerce and immigration. This applies also to the number of medical officers and attendants employed.

12. Financial: The Government usually rents a quarantine plant at a nominal sum until its purchase as a result of an appropriation from Congress. No fees are charged for boarding or inspecting vessels.

13. Cooperation: The quarantine service operated by the National Government has access, when necessary, to cooperation and aid from all other branches of the Government.

There is another strong reason existing at the present time why the complete control of quarantine should be vested in the National Government, and that is the conditions which now prevail in Europe. During the last fiscal year cholera has traveled into the Balkan territory from Austria-Hungary, and probably from Turkey into Austria-Hungary. The disease has traveled from a number of points in Russia to the prison camps in Germany and to 23 localities in Silesia, also to Brandenburg, Posen, and Zirke. This disease has been carried, probably, from the Balkan territory into Italy, and has been reported in and near Venice and Leghorn, and at Palermo.

Plague and typhus fever, as well as cholera, are reported not only to have increased in volume at certain previously noninfected points, but the spread of these diseases has been steady in all directions.

An important point in this connection is the fact that owing to the meager reports now being received as to sanitary conditions in Europe the scope of the infection can not be accurately determined.

Some people believe, although I am not one of them, that the period following the close of the European war will witness unprecedented emigration to the United States from European countries. The United States should be prepared to meet the danger of the importation of epidemic diseases that will attend this increased immigration. All of the reasons cited above for the need of a single, uniform method of quarantine regulation will become doubly important at that time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this money is owed to my city.

I do not want to dwell further on the fact, but the item estimated for by the Treasury Department went out of the bill because of a misunderstanding among the members of the subcommittee and because the Treasury Department did not make clear through its representative who appeared before the committee that it was an absolute agreement entered into between one of its representatives and a representative of the city of Boston. As I have said, the Public Health Service here in Washington for over 12 months has been operating the quarantine station at Boston at a nominal lease of $1 a year, which has allowed them to do it. It is a year since the $150,000 was agreed upon. I do not know that any man will dispute the statement that I make that the Government certainly does owe my city that money. I am perfectly satisfied—perhaps I may be accused of having some conceit—that had I the opportunity of appearing before the subcommittee when the bill was considered this item would have appeared in the bill. It so happens that I am not a member of the subcommittee on sundry civil matters, and I had no information either from the mayor of my city or from the officers in the Treasury Department that the estimate had been recommended. If I had that information I would have appeared before the committee, and I feel certain that it would have recommended the insertion of this item. I do not know whether any Member of the House feels that the Government does not owe my city this $150,000. I have here several communications, and while I do not desire to burden the committee with any lengthy statement, I want to read one from the chamber of commerce, which says:

BOSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
June 5, 1916.

Representative JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN GALLIVAN: Referring to our telegram to you of even date, with respect to the item in the sundry civil bill of $150,000 for the purchase of Boston's quarantine station, I am writing a line to explain the facts in the case.

Last year, at the urgent suggestion of the Federal Government, following an agitation of several years' duration, the mayor gave his approval to the proposition to transfer the quarantine station on Gallups Island from municipal to Federal control. An ordinance permitting this transfer and the sale of the property to the Federal Government was introduced in the city council, which thereupon asked the Chamber of Commerce for an opinion as to the advisability of allowing the transfer to be made.

The chamber investigated the facts through a special committee, and, after examining the conditions in other cities where quarantine stations are under Federal control and looking at the question from a national standpoint, recommended to the city council that the transfer should be made. This recommendation was made with the distinct understanding, backed up by the assurances from officials of the Health Department at Washington, that the Federal Government would forthwith purchase the property from the city at a cost based upon a fair appraisal. I do not think that I am putting it too strongly to say that the chamber's approval to the transfer was to a large extent dependent upon these assurances and the good faith of the Government in having them carried out.

Following the chamber's recommendation, the city council passed the ordinance and the station was duly transferred to the Federal Government at a nominal rental of $1 per year pending the appraisal of the property and the provision by Congress of funds for its purchase. The property was appraised last summer at $150,000, and an item for this amount was inserted in the sundry civil bill, which I believe is now before the House Committee on Appropriations, unless it is reported to the House to-day.

We learned with a great deal of surprise and concern that this item has been stricken out of the bill and that the Federal Government would not be allowed to meet its obligations to the city of Boston with respect to the quarantine station. We believe that every effort should be made to have the item restored, and we count upon your good offices in working to this end.

Very truly, yours, JAMES A. McKIBBEN,
Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I ask fair play for my city and its people. I ask that this amendment be accepted and that Boston be given what it is entitled to receive.

I may say Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that the only quarantine station in the country now not operated under Federal control is the one at Baltimore.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Let me say to the gentleman that negotiations are pending at the present time for the purchase of that station by the Federal Government.

Mr. GALLIVAN. So I have understood, that the Government is arranging for the taking over that quarantine station. There is nothing more I care to add now, and I ask that the committee accept my amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I notice in the hearings a statement to the effect that a speech was made last year calling attention to the fact that a movement had been started in Boston to turn this station over to the Federal Government in order to get rid of the expense.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Who made that statement?

Mr. BORLAND. Made by the chairman of the committee. I was about to ask the gentleman if he made that speech.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Lord bless you, no! [Laughter.] I happened to know before I came to Congress that the Federal Government had been trying for some years to take over this station.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman's colleague, Mr. Murray, made that speech.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Well, I do not stand for all that Mr. Murray said in Congress or for anything that he has said since he has been out of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may have been the present mayor.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the city of Baltimore has made no overtures to the Federal Government, but the Government has made overtures to Baltimore.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the fact remains that this whole thing started here in Washington. I have here a letter from Mr. Newton, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in which he distinctly states the reasons why the Public Health Service wants to take over all of these quarantine stations. It is too long to read, and I am going to ask unanimous consent to insert these reasons in an extension of my remarks. I ask the committee to adopt my amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Who were the appraisers who arrived at this appraisement, and who appointed them?

Mr. GALLIVAN. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Newton, appointed a representative from the Supervising Architect's Office, and that gentleman and the real estate expert of the mayor's office in Boston were the two appraisers. They agreed on the flat sum of $150,000. That was approved by the Treasury Department and agreed to by the City Council of Boston, when it was reported to both bodies.

The estimates as agreed upon by the appraisers are set forth plainly and convincingly in the appended statement, which I respectfully submit for your consideration.

JULY 1, 1915.

The honorable the SECRETARY,
Treasury Department.

SIR: Complying with joint instructions relative to appraising value of land and buildings on Gallops Island, Boston Harbor, Mass., now the property of the city of Boston, and used as a quarantine station, we have the honor to report that after careful investigation of all the property and comparison of values thereof we have arrived at the conclusion that the land, buildings, and appurtenances thereon and therein are, in our judgment, worth the net sum of $150,000, divided approximately as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, to maintain the quarantine station at Boston costs a little over $28,000 a year. The city of Boston has had control of the quarantine station, a very important matter for a great community like Boston, and has been bearing this expense. It seemed to the Committee on Appropriations that a great, progressive, enterprising community like Boston, if it really desired to be relieved of an expense of $28,000 a year, and to be relieved of the care and trouble and difficulty of maintaining the station, would be very eager to show its anxiety and to promote those friendly relations which should exist between municipalities and the Federal Government by donating the property to the Federal Government. It appeared to the committee that that would be a very reasonable and fair trade. The city would be relieved of the trouble and annoyance and anxiety and the more or less incompetent officials that the city probably supplied, and would have the station managed and conducted by the Public Health Service. If there is to be fastened permanently upon the Federal Government an annual charge of $28,000, which is about 3 per cent, I am informed by the mathematicians about me, on an investment of $1,000,000, it was the belief of the committee the city should be glad to donate this little, picayune, one-horse quarantine station to the Federal Government. Of course it has been stated that just as soon as the Federal Government obtains possession of the station it will be necessary, in order to have a station there commensurate with the dignity and power of the United States, to expend a very large sum of money in putting it in suitable shape. Boston will thereby be relieved not only of the annual charge, but will be relieved of this prospective investment, and it will also turn away the power to operate and control the quarantine service, which so vitally affects its own people. It occurred to me—but I do not wish to take credit for this very desirable proposition, when credit does not belong to me—it occurred to a number of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, men of large experience in public affairs, of long service in Congress, having an intimate acquaintance with the attractive qualities of the people of Boston, that that municipality would be very glad to take advantage of the opportunity that this bill presented and turn the station over to the Federal Government free of charge. I am very keenly disappointed that the Representative from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] did not live up to the expectations of these wise and patriotic members of the Committee on Appropriations. Of course the Treasury Department has made the agreement. The station is now being conducted by the Public Health Service, and the Congress has somewhat acquiesced in what has been done by providing the money necessary for the balance of the current year and for the service for the next year; but we had hoped that the gentleman would use his great influence with the city official to have them donate it. It would be an example to Baltimore and all of those other places that have their eager eyes fastened upon the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Not yet. I did not hear all that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] said, but did he recommend that the point of order be withdrawn?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think under the provisions of the act——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I know what the act provides, and I am not asking about that. I just asked what the gentleman from New York recommended. Did he recommend that this provision go into the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee recommended——

Mr. MANN. I know what the committee recommended. If the gentleman does not want to answer that yes or no, he need not. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the law. It came from the committee on which I served for many years, and I was familiar with the bill and helped to make it up. I was opposed to that provision of the bill which authorized the Government to pay for these quarantine stations. The fact is that for many years the States or municipalities conducted the quarantine. It was not very well conducted, possibly outside of Boston, New York, and a few of the other larger cities. The Public Health Service desired to have control of the quarantine stations. The local people said they had to pay for them, although their maintenance was to the interest of all of the people to prevent disease from coming in through the local ports. The local people in the main said that they would like to get rid of the quarantine stations, because it is a matter that affects all of the people. The Public Health Service said that they would like to get control of the stations. This does not apply to New York City, which, I believe, never wants to give up anything that it has—not this, anyway. We passed a law that authorized these quarantine stations to be turned over to the General Government. I though they were doing extremely well to get the General Government to pay the expense of these local quarantine stations. It means an annual expense account amounting to a large sum of money to the local people. Take the one at Boston. It probably costs the General Government, or will when it is operating, fifty to one hundred thousand dollars a year for current expenses and maintenance at Boston. Boston is relieved of that expense. The same was true of New Orleans, of Savannah, of various other ports. I was opposed to the provision in the law that authorized the General Government to pay these local people, because I thought they were doing well enough to get rid of the work and expense of the quarantine and put it off on the General Government without our paying them for it. It is like a man having an elephant on his hands, and we have all heard of a man who has an elephant on his hands. Feed is very high.

These local people not only want us to feed the elephant but pay them for the privilege of doing so. That is what it amounts to. I do not think the Boston case has any greater merit simply by itself, but it is true we put in the law a provision that the General Government might pay for the local stations. It is true that we have paid for a number of them. I do not think we ought ever to have paid for one of them, but I am frank to say I am not able to differentiate between the case of New Orleans, Savannah, and various other ports and the case at Boston. We have saved quite a sum of money by not taking over the Boston station 10 years ago, probably saved enough to pay for the station several times. Wholly against my views of the situation under the circumstances, I am not going to insist upon the point of order and I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

New Orleans quarantine station: For boarding vessel and equipment, $25,000; for fire protection, $4,000; for dynamo and engine, including installation, for electric light for night inspection, $1,200; in all, $30,200.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 27, strike out lines 13 to 16, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"New Orleans, La., quarantine station: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to begin the construction of the necessary walls, piers, etc., for a new quarantine station (to replace the present station), hereby authorized, at a total limit of cost not to exceed $500,000, the land to be donated without cost to the United States on the Mississippi River, below the city of New Orleans, the acceptance of which donation is hereby authorized, $50,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Chairman, we have an estimate submitted by the Treasury Department for this station. The Government is called upon now to spend $30,000 on the antiquated quarantine station near the Gulf, which is 90 miles from New Orleans. The storm of last September almost destroyed the station, causing great damage. A considerable amount of money already has been expended on it since the storm. The present station is very much out of the way for the convenience of commerce and for the convenience of the traveling public, passengers coming up to quarantine are sometimes kept there 24 hours before they can come up to the city and are subjected to many inconveniences thereby. The business that comes through the port of New Orleans is very large; it is one of the largest ports in the country, and the commerce is very much affected by the delays caused by this quarantine station being so far away. When the quarantine was established there many years ago it was the opinion then that quarantine stations must be located at great distances from the port. Under modern conditions of sanitation we can take care of all contagious diseases. There is no longer any fear of yellow fever or any other disease. They can now be isolated and treated near a city without danger. I introduced H. R. 12586, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The bill was considered by the committee but never reported upon. Estimates were submitted by the Treasury Department fixing the amount necessary to build and equip the station at $500,000, and this amendment provides that $50,000 be appropriated now to begin the work. The money will have to be appropriated in the near future for a modern quarantine station for the port of New Orleans, and this should be done now before repairs are made to the old station, which will be a waste; we ask that the station be transferred to a point nearer the city for the convenience of commerce as well as for the convenience of the Public Health Service. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is to establish a new quarantine station which is not authorized by law. This committee can not undertake to initiate and establish new stations at a cost of half a million dollars when we have a very fine station which we purchased from the city of New Orleans for $100,000 within 10 years——

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman says purchased from the city of New Orleans; it was purchased from the State of Louisiana, but that is immaterial. The gentleman understands there is no attempt on our part to get two quarantine stations. The idea is to abandon the old station and have a modern one near the city on a site to be donated by the city of New Orleans, free of cost, to the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I think it is a matter that in the near future will be taken care of in the proper way in view of the situation down there, but I think that the conditions at present are not so bad that they can not be deferred three or four months or a year. The matter ought to be gone into very fully——

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will not the gentleman admit that the matter was gone into very fully before the gentleman's committee——

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the committee has no jurisdiction to establish new stations.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I recognize that fact; but in view of the fact that the committee has appropriated in this bill some $30,000 for the repair of the old quarantine station, and the gentleman says in the course of three or four months or a year it will probably be abandoned, does not the gentleman think that amount had better be devoted to the construction of a new station, when the small sum of $50,000 is all that is asked for by the Treasury Department in their estimate at this time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; because this money is not enough to operate the new station. It is needed whether a new station would be made or not. Fifty thousand dollars would not equip or fit or make available any new station so that it would have the facilities that would be proper. The city of New Orleans would be deprived of things which are absolutely imperative in order to properly conduct the existing station.

Mr. DUPRÉ. We would be very glad to have both, I will say to the gentleman, but we thought that it would appeal more to him and to the House and that our plea would come with better grace if we would say that we were willing to forego one and take the other.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Louisiana knows that the committee was quite liberal in dealing with New Orleans——

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will not attempt to enlighten the gentleman in public except to say that the committee did everything for New Orleans in this bill that it could do under the authorizations now existing——

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do not consider that the committee——

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). It provided for the lighting of the Mississippi River from New Orleans to the Gulf in a manner that will rival Broadway on its busiest night.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am very grateful for that, but that has nothing to do with the quarantine station which we are discussing here. Those propositions stand on their own respective merits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not authorized. I am constrained to insist on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The expected has happened.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting some letters and telegrams in reference to this subject; also the estimate of the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters and telegrams are as follows:

THE NEW ORLEANS BOARD OF TRADE (LTD.),
New Orleans, June 1, 1916.

Hon. H. GARLAND DUPRÉ, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR:: The directors of the New Orleans Board of Trade and the commercial public of our city are very deeply interested in the removal of the quarantine station from its present location to one upon the site which the city has arranged to donate, which is very much closer to the city.

If the bill which has been introduced by Mr. ESTOPINAL is not favorably acted upon by Congress at its present session, it is imperative that the Government should expend a very large sum of money for the immediate repair and restoration of the present station.

It is, therefore, evident that unless this station be entirely satisfactory, which it is not, the money spent upon its repair will be futile and would be much better applied to the building of a new station.

Whilst the amount asked by the Treasury Department for the building of a new station is larger than we had understood from the Surgeon General would be necessary, the quarantine station at New Orleans is by far the largest and most important station in charge of the Federal Government in the country, and its commerce is entitled to the very best facility possible.

It is of very great importance to the commerce of our port that the station be changed as provided in Mr. ESTOPINAL'S bill, and we therefore trust that you gentlemen representing Louisiana in Congress may be able, by joint action, to insure favorable action by Congress on this matter at its present session.

Yours, very truly, M. J. SANDERS, President.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 1, 1916.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith, for inclusion in the sundry civil appropriation bill, now under consideration, the following estimate:

New Orleans, La., additional quarantine station: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to begin the construction of the necessary buildings, wharves, piers, etc., for an additional quarantine station, hereby authorized at a total limit of cost of not to exceed $500,000, on land to be donated to the United States on the Mississippi River, below the city of New Orleans, La., the acceptance of which said donation is hereby authorized $50,000

Inclosed is a copy of a letter dated May 18, 1914, addressed to the chairman, Committee on Appropriations, making a report on H. R. 12586, which is self-explanatory.

The above estimate is submitted under the national quarantine act approved June 19, 1906 (34 Stat., 299), and it is recommended that the same be given favorable consideration, looking to an appropriation in the amount above named.

Respectfully, W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

MAY 18, 1916.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In accordance with the request of Hon. ALBERT ESTOPINAL the following report is submitted on H. R. 12586, which provides for an appropriation for erecting and equipping and otherwise providing a quarantine station at or near the city of New Orleans, La.

It is understood that the site on which the proposed quarantine station is to be construed will be donated free of cost to the Government. The proposed site is about 7 miles from the city of New Orleans and is located on the west bank of the Mississippi River, on which it has a frontage of 3,000 feet. The lot has a depth of 1,200 feet. The present quarantine station is located 90 miles below the city of New Orleans, and the object in transferring the same to the proposed new location is not only for the sake of convenience but for economical administration.

The requirements for the new station are substantially as follows: Officers' quarters, executive building and general storeroom, attendants' quarters, mess hall and kitchen, mess hall for detained persons, refrigerating room and ice plant, detention barracks, bath building, general hospital, guardhouse, isolation hospital, laboratory and morgue, crematory, stable and animal house, disinfecting building, boathouse, and fire pump house. In addition there will be required wharves, complete sewer system, lighting system, water system, telephone system, etc.

It is estimated that the cost of constructing the above building, including the other items enumerated, will be $500,000.

Inasmuch as time will be required to prepare the plans after the site has been acquired, should the proposed quarantine station be authorized, it will not be necessary to appropriate the full amount at this time, and it is therefore submitted that the sum of $50,000 will be sufficient for the commencement of the construction of the proposed station.

Respectfully, W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

MAY 24, 1916.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a supplemental estimate, with the request that it be submitted to Congress, for an appropriation to provide for erecting, equipping, and otherwise providing a quarantine station at or near New Orleans, La., to be available until used.

The New Orleans quarantine station is located 90 miles below the city of New Orleans. The present site was selected by the State of Louisiana many years before the mode of transmission of many of the quarantinable diseases was thoroughly understood, and when it was believed that the contagion of yellow fever and similar ailments was conveyed through the air for considerable distances. The station was established solely for protection against disease and with relatively small regard for the convenience of commerce or ease of operation.

During the last decade quarantine procedure has been radically modified. Important facts regarding the transmission of cholera, plague, typhus, and yellow fever, the principal quarantinable diseases, have been discovered, and the measures for their detection on incoming vessels and the avoidance of their dissemination have become exact and definite. Modern quarantine stations are at present conducted in close proximity to large cities, without the slightest danger of the spread of contagion. Every effort compatible with safety is now made to facilitate the movement of commerce. The period of detention of vessels has been shortened, treatment by fumigation is performed with efficiency and rapidity, and all quarantine practices have been made uniform.

The object of the transference of the New Orleans station to a more convenient site is to make possible the adoption to the fullest extent of modern methods of inspection and treatment of infected vessels. It will effect a considerable economy in administration. The means of communication with the present station are difficult, there being no rail or trolley connection, a small boat making the trip from New Orleans twice a week.

Supplies are seldom received promptly, and in emergencies when several hundred people must be housed and provisioned this greatly interferes with the efficiency of the station. Vessels which have reached quarantine during the night are inspected at sunrise and released, but as the voyage to New Orleans requires approximately eight hours they arrive too late in the afternoon to discharge their cargoes; hence an entire day is lost. This is an important consideration with chartered vessels, and often means a loss of several hundred dollars to the charterers or owners, especially in these days when freight congestion is so marked. Many of these vessels are laden with perishable cargoes, a large percentage of the shipping entering the port of New Orleans being engaged in the fruit trade. To avoid this delay and consequent injury to commerce, the Public Health Service has inaugurated a night inspection service, but even with this provision commerce is not facilitated to the extent which would be possible if the station were nearer New Orleans.

Respectfully,

RUPERT BLUE, Surgeon General.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of all necessary employees, other than employees required for the administrative work of the bureau of the class provided for and specified in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917, and plate printers and plate printers' assistants, $1,408,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and without increasing the rate of pay for any class of services in the bureau beyond the rate paid therefor January 1, 1916: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired, except in so far as such printing may be necessary in executing the requirements of the act "To define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 40, line 7, after the word "Treasury," strike out the comma and insert a period, and strike out the remainder of line 7, all of lines 8, 9, and 10 to and including the word "sixteen."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the object of this proposed amendment is to give the chief of the bureau the right or power to increase the pay of such deserving men as may be entitled to it. It does not compel him to do it, but only gives him discretion to do so. Where men have been working for 16 or 18 years at one rate of pay, it seems to me their superior ought to have the right to raise their pay in certain cases. I think it is only fair that these men who have worked all this time at this set rate of pay, with the increase in the cost of living, should be given the opportunity that they would have in private life. Therefore I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the provision which the gentleman moves to strike out relates to maximum pay. This provision does not interfere with promotions or increases of pay within the maximum that was paid on the 1st of January, this year. There should be some control by Congress over compensation to employees. Any employee in the Government can be promoted up to the maximum compensation. In the Bureau of Engraving and Printing they are more liberal than in any other service of the Government. The committee believes this is not the time to indulge in wholesale increases in maximum pay to these employees. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recoinage of gold coins: For recoinage of light-weight gold coins in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, as required by section 3512 of the Revised Statutes, $5,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 22 to offer an amendment to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, line 13, strike out "Skonwhega" and insert in lieu thereof "Skowhegan."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign Governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign Governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President and of the person chosen to be President of the United States, $200,000: Provided further, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 45, line 23, by striking out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 45, line 23, strike out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional assistant surgeons, $25,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against line 10, on page 47, "for additional assistant surgeons." It is new legislation and not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. There are no definite numbers of assistant surgeons in the Public Health Service, and in order to indicate that an additional number are being provided for this is segregated from the rest of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] whether there is any law authorizing the appointment of assistant surgeons in this department?

Mr. MANN. There is. The law in relation to the Public Health Service authorizes assistant surgeons. There is no limit on the number.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does not show how many are appropriated for, one or a dozen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that if the law authorizes the appointment of assistant surgeons, the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not find any law authorizing it.

Mr. MANN. The public-health law authorizes them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] if he has the law there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not been able to put my hand on it. My recollection is that the law does not limit the number of surgeons in the Public Health Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is whether or not the law authorizes the appointment of assistant surgeons.

Mr. MANN. The public-health law provides for assistant surgeons.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The word "additional," then——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas agree to that, that that is the law?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Prevention of epidemics: To enable the President, in case only of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague or black death, or trachoma, to aid State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force, $400,000: Provided, That a detailed report of the expenditures hereunder shall annually hereafter be submitted to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask the gentleman from New York how much of the appropriation of $500,000 for the prevention of epidemics has been expended up to any recent report? I think we make an appropriation each year for the prevention of epidemics. Originally it was supposed to be an emergency appropriation. Do they go ahead and spend this money regularly, anyhow?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is now that they are doing so in connection with the bubonic-plague work in Seattle, San Francisco, and New Orleans. There was an unexpended balance of $55,000 in March.

Mr. MANN. That was for last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think they had some occasion to spend the money in the last fiscal year; but are they spending the current appropriation of $500,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They will spend next year about $400,000, according to my recollection.

Mr. MANN. They do not treat this any more as an exigency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The original purpose, as the gentleman remembers, was to have a fund——

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But now the trachoma work and the force employed in San Francisco, Seattle, and New Orleans are being paid out of this fund. Then, from time to time there have been some alarm that have occasioned the detailing of employees of the Public Health Service at various places. This is entirely taken up annually, but only for diseases of the character enumerated. Formerly they employed men out of this fund and detailed them to work in connection with other diseases than those enumerated in this paragraph. Now, all the work is done in connection with the prevention or elimination of the diseases enumerated here.

Mr. MANN. Of course, this year we have had no cholera, no yellow fever, no bubonic plague that I know of; no Chinese plague or black death. We have typhus fever always with us. We have smallpox always with us, and trachoma always with us, but not as an emergency matter—no epidemic.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are maintaining a very large force in New Orleans and San Francisco and Seattle on the bubonic-plague work, in the extermination of the rats, and are doing considerable work on trachoma.

Mr. MANN. I wondered whether they had gotten so that they proposed to spend all this money on trachoma and smallpox.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They spend it every year.

Mr. MANN. Those are things which ought to be taken care of by the localities and the States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They spend the entire sum every year.

Mr. MANN. Then, if we have an emergency, they will not have any money with which to take care of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If they have an emergency, they will rely on Congress being in session, as it has been for several years, practically all the time. There has been an attempt made year after year to keep separate an emergency fund for these epidemics, but it is impossible to do so. You can not appropriate the money and have an emergency fund without the Public Health Service discovering some emergency that will enable that service to spend the money.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the Public Health Service has been quite fair with Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it has not. Congress in providing this fund was doing what everyone realized was a very important service, setting aside an appropriation of half a million dollars which would be available for the Public Health Service in the event of some epidemic. Ever since that has been done, in some way or other the money has been expended, although except on very rare occasions it has not been expended under the circumstances contemplated when the appropriation was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Field investigations: For investigations of diseases of man and conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation and sewage, and the pollution of navigable streams and lakes of the United States, including personal service, $250,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRISON: Page 50, line 3, after the word "including," insert "demonstration work in the prevention and control of mosquito-transmitted diseases"; also, strike out "$250,000," in line 5, same page, and insert "$450,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not care to be heard if the point of order is good.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is good.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is good. There is no specific authority for the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Mississippi. The paragraph is in the language of the organic act. The gentleman can not enlarge that work by including in it something not provided for in the organic act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to see the language of the organic act.

Mr. MANN. This is in the exact language of the provision of the law, I believe, passed two or three years ago.

Mr. HARRISON. I was going to read to the Chair the argument the gentleman from Illinois made at that time. I think this is not subject to the point of order. If the gentleman from New York has said all he wishes to say, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I notice it says:

Including sanitation and sewage.

I should like to ask whether there has been any investigation made of those subjects.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let that come after this question of order is settled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order. Let us have it settled.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think this amendment is subject to the point of order. I think it comes within the authority of the law under the wording of the statute that the Chair has before him. I want to read it:

The Public Health Service may study and investigate the diseases of man and conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation and sewage—

And so forth. Now, it is quite true that for the most part that provision followed the wording of the statute. But the words "study" and "investigation" are quite different in their meaning. In this matter one is much broader in its meaning than the other. If the word "study" means anything as written in the law giving to the Public Health Service the authority "to study the diseases of man and the conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof," it means that not only can they investigate under authority of law the diseases of man, but they can study those diseases and conditions by making experiments or employing such other means as will best enable the service to study the conditions or source of the diseases. So I think the word "study" as employed in the statute carries with it the authority for an appropriation that would give the Public Health Service the right to do demonstration work or experimental work in preventing and controlling mosquito-transmitted diseases.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is true, what would be the need of putting it into the law, if they have that power now?

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Chair that I had the matter up with the Public Health Service to investigate a situation that is local in my district touching the mosquito question. They did investigate it, and they said that while they might be able to do more, they did not feel that they could without special authority. The appropriation that is made under this head specifies only for investigation. The appropriation is limited. It does not go so far as the statute and say that you can study and investigate into the diseases of man, but it limits the appropriation to the investigation of the diseases of man, and so forth, and so the Public Health Service was quite right in saying that since the appropriation limits the proposition specifically to investigations into the diseases of man that they probably could not go so far. My contention now is that the authority of law is not lacking, and I want to remove the restriction or limitation placed upon the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where does investigation stop and study begin?

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman can ask that in a facetious way if he likes, but this is a serious matter to my people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking the gentleman seriously, where does investigation stop and study begin?

Mr. HARRISON. They are experimenting under this very appropriation in pellagra in my own State.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a specific appropriation for pellagra.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true; but the gentleman will see that in the expenditures under this item that there was expended $19,944 for the study of pellagra, and that money was spent, not for investigation into pellagra but in some cases for demonstration and experimental work; and the department did a very capable and very splendid piece of work. They went into my State and said to the executive authorities, let us have 12 convicts and have them for six months or some fixed period and we will demonstrate that we can cure pellagra. They dieted them, in some instances, to give them pellagra; in other instances to cure those who had it, but in practically all the cases they demonstrated that pellagra could be cured by the dieting process. There was a demonstration and experiment under this item of the bill under the authority I have cited.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If they can study pellagra under this provision, why not study mosquito-transmitted diseases?

Mr. HARRISON. The Public Health Service said they did not feel warranted under the limitation in the appropriation to do more than they had done. I am trying to cure a situation; I am asking for more money; I am broadening the provisions to meet the intention of the law; and I am trying to submit to gentlemen that there is a difference between study and investigation. I submit that under the statute that gives authority to appropriate money for the Public Health Service when it says "for study and investigation" the word "study" carries with it more than mere investigation and includes demonstration and experiment. This question was up several Congresses ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman that there is a specific appropriation made for the study of pellagra of $40,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but under the provision of the $200,000 last year appropriated, similar to the item under consideration, they spent over $19,000 for study and experiment and demonstration in pellagra.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's argument, but I wanted him to know that there was also a special appropriation made for pellagra.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is to maintain a specific hospital set aside for that work, and they wanted the appropriation for a particular hospital. This is field investigation.

Mr. HARRISON. In 1914 the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offered an amendment under this head, and that amendment read as follows:

For the investigation and eradication of the disease-carrying mosquito.

The Chairman will note that my amendment does not say "disease-carrying mosquitoes," but makes it for demonstration work in mosquito-transmitted diseases, which I think is different. The gentleman from New York made a point of order, and in an argument on that proposition the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said this:

I myself think, therefore, while not remembering the exact form of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], that his amendment would be in order, although I think it is wholly unnecessary, and I shall not vote for it if it is submitted to the House, because up to date I do not think we can afford to divide up the appropriation. The Public Health Service has the power now, without the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. They can use the appropriation for that purpose, and, so far, I think it has been the design of Congress to permit them to exercise, at least in the first instance and for the present, their judgment as to how the money should be expended for these different items for which we might appropriate and which they might expend.

A little farther down he says:

The intention was—and I think it is shown, or I would not say that was the intention—in general language to confer upon the Public Health Service the broadest power that the General Government has or could exercise in reference to diseases of man and the spread and propagation thereof, and also in reference to the pollution of water supply and the handling of sewage.

I want the Chair to bear in mind that, while the statute expressly gives authority to the Public Health Service to study and investigate the diseases of man and the conditions of those diseases, that the appropriations are made like the provision herein only for the investigation into the diseases of man, and that the word "study" in the statute would give us the right to carry out the provisions of the amendment, which I think is clearly in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment provides for demonstration or experimental work. The point of order was sustained because the organic act does not authorize demonstration work any more than it does experimental work. The appropriation is carried in the exact language of the organic act.

If the Chair wishes to see this decision the gentleman cites, it is here. The amendment was to provide for "experimental work for the investigation and eradication." To that a point of order was sustained. This amendment provides for "demonstration work," which is not expressed in the organic act.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman think the word "eradication" and the word "demonstration" mean the same thing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think they are different from each other and both subject to the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think "demonstration" is subject to the point of order. "Eradication" would be.

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the law is that the Public Health Service "may study and investigate the diseases of man," and so forth. The language of the bill is "for the investigation of diseases." It does not use the word "study," but the Chair has looked up the meaning of the word "study" and finds that it means "to endeavor to learn or learn about by means of mental application, examine, search into," and the Chair thinks that the law in using that word does not amplify the meaning of the word "investigation." Both mean investigation, so that the Chair is of opinion that the amendment is subject to the point of order, because it provides for "demonstration work," and is beyond the scope of the law under which the appropriation is made. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the words "demonstration work" and inserting the word "study."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "including," on page 50, line 3, insert the words "study in the prevention and control of mosquito-transmitted diseases"; and also strike out, in line 5, same page, the figures "$250,000," and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$450,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is beyond the scope of the organic act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no provision in the organic act for the control of these diseases.

Mr. HARRISON. It is to study the control and prevention.

Mr. FITZGERALD. "Study" and "control" are entirely different. It goes beyond the scope of the organic act, and it is designedly intended to do so, or there would be no necessity for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, unless the gentleman from Mississippi desires to be heard upon it.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the Chair had overruled the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did so announce his decision at first, but on examining more carefully the Chair changes his mind.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the reason the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] gave was that it dislodged the Public Health Service of the discretion in the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair apprehends that the reason for making the point of order by the gentleman from New York is that the gentleman from Mississippi is endeavoring to give to the Public Health Service the power to go into the control and the prevention of diseases, when the law only provides for their study and investigation.

Mr. HARRISON. That is exactly what my amendment proposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment does not. The gentleman's amendment proposes to study the prevention and control of these diseases, and increases the appropriation for that purpose, and the Chair thinks, unless the gentleman can give some reason for it, that the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the authority of law gave the right to the Public Health Service to investigate diseases and study diseases, and this amendment, I take it, gives the right to study the control and prevention of mosquito-transmitted diseases.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman's amendment provides for the control and prevention of these diseases.

Mr. HARRISON. It is not the intention of the author of the amendment to do that. It is only to study how to control and prevent.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, if the gentleman wants to accomplish that, what is the purpose of putting in "the control and prevention" when by inserting the words "study and investigation," which is the law, he will accomplish his purpose?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us have a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer to amend after the word "including," in line 3, page 50, by inserting "the study of mosquito-transmitted diseases," and in line 5, page 50, by striking out "$250,000" and inserting "$450,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 3, after the word "including," insert "study of mosquito-transmitted diseases," and also strike out "$250,000" in line 5, same page, and insert "$450,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, there is no branch of the Government that deserves more liberal treatment at the hands of Congress than the Public Health Service. It is that branch of the public service when epidemics of dread diseases threaten localities and the people become frightened and panic-stricken that goes forth like a ministering angel and allays alarm, assists in curing the afflicted, and suppresses the outbreaks of disease. It is that branch of the public service that is constantly on guard, investigating and combating diseases that sap human life.

The wonderful work that it has done can not be measured in dollars and cents. Suffice it to say, it has carried blessings and happiness to every section of our land.

And yet with all the good that it has accomplished, all the lives it has saved and the happiness preserved, it receives less appropriations for its maintenance by the Federal Government than almost any bureau of the public service. This bill carries for the support and maintenance of the Public Health Service of this country an appropriation of approximately $4,000,000, and yet that sum, which includes the pay for all the surgeons, the officers, and employees, transportation charges, purchase of supplies, maintenance of hospitals, rents for buildings, quarantine stations, and so forth, is little more than the sum appropriated by this Congress annually for the eradication of one disease of animals—the foot-and-mouth disease.

This bill only appropriates $250,000 for investigating diseases of man and conditions influencing the spread of diseases, and yet we appropriate for the animal industry of this country over $3,000,000, for the plant industry over $2,000,000, and the preservation of forests $5,500,000. The amendment that I propose is to add $200,000 to the appropriation already provided for which will be used in studying mosquito-transmitted diseases.

I am sure that none of you will take issue with me on the fact that mosquitoes are the most dangerous of all pests in the transmission of disease. It is no longer disputed that the sting of the stegomyia transmit yellow fever, and that malaria and other fevers are transmitted by other species of mosquitoes.

In many sections of this country malaria is prevalent, and it is most essential to the health of this Nation that these agents of disease and death are destroyed. It was the mosquito that a few years ago brought yellow fever to the South, that made Habana uninhabitable, Panama uninviting, but because of the work of the Public Health Service and the Medical Corps of the Army Habana now blossoms like the rose and Panama is one of the most healthful spots in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What does the gentleman think of the pollution of the Potomac River by the sewage of the city of Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. It ought to be remedied.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What does the gentleman think of the pollution of the Severn River at the Naval Academy?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it is outrageous. The Federal Government ought to give some concern to the health of the people of this country and less concern to animals.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The mosquito is playing some havoc along the Gulf Coast just now, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. The situation we are in down there is quite like that of the people of Philadelphia and Baltimore.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the whole of the Atlantic coast.

Mr. HARRISON. And of New York City and the whole country. In my particular locality we are up against this proposition. We have no marshes on the Mississippi coast. Nothing but a land of sunshine and happiness. We have no places there where mosquitoes could breed, but they come to us from the islands and marshes adjacent to the mouth of the Mississippi River in another State some 60 or 70 miles away; the winds bring them over to us. It is not a matter that can be remedied by the State or by any particular locality, but it is a matter that the Federal Government ought to study and try to ascertain some way by which these mosquitoes may be destroyed and prevented from being carried by the winds from one State to another State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has it developed in the gentleman's State that it is impossible to control the mosquito within State lines? That is the argument I have been making here right along.

Mr. HARRISON. I know the gentleman has been fighting a long time against these mosquitoes and he deserves the thanks of the American people. I will say to the gentleman that no mosquitoes breed on the Mississippi coast, and those we get come from other places. I am under the impression that if they were confined to the towns and localities they might look after them, but, as the gentleman knows, if they come to Philadelphia from Delaware and breed in Delaware, the people of the State of Pennsylvania can not look after the matter, and if they come from Pennsylvania to Delaware and are bred in Pennsylvania the people of Delaware can not look after them. That is the condition that confronts my people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One State would not have jurisdiction over another State?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely no jurisdiction.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not aware of the fact that it was demonstrated in Panama that the mosquito never traveled over a mile or two distant from his native habitat, and ordinarily did not travel half a mile?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He can begin at one stagnant pond and go to another stagnant pond, and so on and on.

Mr. HARRISON. The statement of the gentleman reinforces my argument that there ought to be an increased appropriation here, because the study of the mosquito shows constant changed opinions and conclusions about its habits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for five minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for just one more question?

Mr. HARRISON. In just a moment. I want to answer your suggestion. Dr. Blue told me that he does not know how it is possible for these mosquitoes to be brought 60 miles; but it is a fact, and for that reason, if the Public Health Service has found a new condition touching the mosquito, does not the gentleman from Wyoming think that this great branch of the public service should continue to study this question and find out all these changing facts, so that the people of this country may take steps to cure that situation?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, does the gentleman consider that the Louisiana gallinipper differs from the Panama creature in that it travels 60 miles, while the Panama mosquito can not travel over a mile?

Mr. HARRISON. All mosquitoes differ, I think; there are no two just alike. If the gentleman will let some of them bite him, he will think that no two bite alike. If he should hear their songs at night, he would think that none sings alike. They all, however, are dangerous pests and should be stamped out.

The Public Health Service has already performed wonderful work in making investigations and sending out information to the various localities of the country.

Investigations and sending out literature is all well and good; it answers splendid purposes; but if it is right for the Federal Government to spend $50,000 annually in investigating and experimenting in the utilization of coloring materials, as is provided in the Agricultural bill passed by this Congress, the reasons are certainly more powerful why demonstrations should be conducted in the interest of the prevention and control of mosquito-borne diseases.

If it is right for the Government to spend annually $175,000, as is provided in the Agricultural bill, for investigating and demonstrating to determine the best method of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, then certainly there are more compelling reasons for providing an adequate appropriation to demonstrate methods for the prevention and control of mosquitoes.

We appropriated this year $305,000 to prevent the spread of moths and to conduct such experiments as would be necessary to determine the best methods of controlling those insects, and went so far as to provide for the introduction of the parasite or other natural enemies of the insects, and went further and provided for colonizing them within infested territory.

If Congress thought it was good and well to prevent the spread of moths in order to protect the agriculture of this country, how much more important is it for us to provide the means and agencies whereby mosquitoes that bear disease that affect human life may be exterminated?

We even appropriated $20,000 this year for investigations and demonstrations in bee culture. In other words, we are willing to spend money to assist in bee culture that honey may be provided. Are we unwilling to provide the agency whereby mosquitoes may be destroyed and human life saved? It may be argued that the Government already makes these investigations and informs these localities what they can do in order to rid themselves of mosquitoes. I answer that argument by saying that information concerning the investigations into bee culture, of the preservation of forests, the utilization of coloring materials, investigations as to the best methods of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, or the prevention of the spread of moths can be distributed to the people through bulletins; but we do not stop in those cases at that; we take the experiments right to the people that the localities themselves may profit from the Government's experience.

Government demonstration farms and Government demonstration work in the animal industry, in horticulture, and in many other industries I might enumerate have aided the people of this country a thousand times more than all the bulletins that were ever sent out from all the bureaus of the Government.

And in a mosquito infested locality, if the Government has the means of carrying its experiments to that locality and demonstrating what can be done to rid it of mosquitoes, we would be carrying to the people of that locality a blessing that words can not picture.

If this increase is provided for, it will give the Public Health Service the means whereby it can go wherever it is called to stamp out these mosquitoes and cooperate with the States and localities in such a way that these most obnoxious pests can not survive and transmit the diseases which they alone are the cause of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is compelled, unfortunately, to confuse that which he really wants with that which, under the rules of the House, he is obliged to ask for. The gentleman does not want the mosquito studied so far as it is a disease transmitter or carrier. That is well understood now.

When Maj. Reed lost his life in demonstrating that yellow fever was carried by the mosquito, the world was given information of incalculable advantage, and since then the investigations that have been conducted have given medical authorities as much information as they think they are likely to obtain about the mosquito as a disease carrier. That is not what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] wants. What he is interested in is some sort of regulation to prevent what might be termed interstate traffic in the mosquito. He happens to live in that magnificent State of Mississippi which, fortunately or otherwise, is a sister State of Louisiana. Louisiana seems to be so unfortunate as to cultivate mosquitoes in a few isolated places——

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. According to the charge of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I just want to know if it is possible that in my absence from the Hall the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has been putting all the mosquitoes onto Louisiana?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has. And it seems to me that these mosquitoes are of such a type that occasionally in their nocturnal wanderings they drift across the line into the State of Mississippi and constitute an annoyance to the people of that State.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield.

Mr. CALDWELL. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think something ought to be done about the situation in Flatbush and in Jamaica Bay?

Mr. LINTHICUM. And I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not a river-pollution proposition.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is a well-known fact. The gentleman spoke of the interstate mosquito. I want to say that I am not so much interested in the interstate mosquitoes as the mosquitoes that come from the districts of my friend TALBOTT and my friend MUDD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I sympathize with Maryland for having these different mosquitoes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We are spending thousands of dollars——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield further. The Public Health Service is a well-informed, active branch of the Government. It not only knows the things it wishes to study and investigate, but it is not at all modest in asking the means to make such studies and investigations. In 1912 the appropriations for the Public Health Service aggregated $1,500,000. This bill carries for that service $2,943,000, or, since 1912, the appropriations have been doubled. The Public Health Service has not asked for this money. It has expressed no desire to obtain money to make these investigations. In a wise conduct of the Public Health Service, in investigating all of the diseases of man which it is authorized to investigate, it asks for next year, all told, but $300,000, and this bill carries $250,000 for that purpose. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] proposes to appropriate $200,000 to ascertain, if possible, how the migratory habits of the Louisiana mosquitoes may be controlled so as to keep them out of Mississippi. I hope the amendment may be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 3, after the word "sewage," insert the words "the investigation of the disease-carrying mosquito."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. The committee has just disposed of it. It is not authorized by law. The Public Health Service is not authorized to investigate plants and animals.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that was just voted down provided a change in the appropraition, but, so far as that is concerned, it does not enter into the question. The Chair held to be in order that portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi which did not carry an appropriation. The language of my amendment proposes to give direction to the Public Health Service to investigate the disease-carrying mosquito—entirely within the limitation of the existing law—but it does not provide for any increase of appropriation. It seems to me it is entirely germane, because it conforms exactly to the language of the law and does not raise the question of appropriation at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask on what ground the Chair sustained the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order on the ground that the law does not contemplate the investigation of the mosquito. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

American ethnology: For continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians and the natives of Hawaii, including the excavation and preservation of archæologic remains, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including necessary employees and the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, $42,000.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 12, after the word "periodicals," strike out "$42,000" and insert "$44,000."

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, the School of American Archæology at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and the Royal Ontario Museum, of Toronto, Canada, have each allotted the sum of $2,000 for the purpose of partly meeting the expense of a joint expedition to the Chaco Canyon in northern New Mexico with the view of conducting archæological excavations in the great prehistoric ruins in that section. This scientific work will cost at least $6,000 per year for five or six years.

As the ruins referred to are situated within the Chaco Canyon National Monument, proclaimed as such by the President by reason of the great scientific importance of these aboriginal remains, it is proper that the Government should participate in this joint research and contribute its share, namely, $2,000, toward the expense. An agreement, effective among the three scientific institutions when the means are granted the Smithsonian Institution to enable it to take part in the research, has been drawn up.

The proposed research is of great scientific importance and should by all means be conducted. The interests of the Government in the project can best be subserved by increasing this appropriation of $42,000 to $44,000.

I hope my amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not agree that the appropriation should be made for the purposes specified by the gentleman from New Mexico. It may be desirable. I do not know. If this investigation is to be made, it should not be made under an agreement by the Smithsonian Institution with some Canadian society as well as an American society. It is to be done on Government property, and if these investigations are made they should be made by the Government itself. The matter has never been called to the attention of Congress in any way that I have ever known of, except now by the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Of course this was not brought before the Committee on Appropriations. Probably the situation had not arisen until after the bill had been acted upon by the committee. My understanding is that the Smithsonian Institution has made a contract with a Canadian society and a United States society to join in this excavation work; I suppose for the purpose of getting out various articles, which undoubtedly will be in duplicate, with the idea of furnishing one set to the Canadian society—which is also an American society—one set to the United States society, and one set to the National Museum. They have made this contract. It is very much to the interest of the Government to have this excavation work carried on in connection with the others, because it will cost only one-third as much, and we will get just as much out of it as we would if we carried on the whole work ourselves.

This archæological work down there is, I was going to say, quite important. Certainly it is very interesting. In view of the fact that they have entered into this arrangement, and that Dr. Walcott is fairly conservative about such things, I think we might properly appropriate $2,000 to carry it out.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I have a copy of the contract, which I will be glad to furnish to the gentleman. This contract is as follows:

Memorandum of agreement between Charles D. Walcott, of the Smithsonian Institution; C. T. Currelly, of the Royal Ontario Museum of Toronto, Canada; and Edgar L. Hewett, of the School of American Archæology, Santa Fe, N. Mex., acting in behalf of their respective institutions, with reference to a joint investigation of the ancient ruins of Chaco Canyon National Monument, New Mexico.

It is proposed to undertake jointly the systematic and definite study of the above-mentioned group of ruins and continue the same for a term of years.

The three parties hereto will contribute for the work annually, beginning with the year 1917, the sum of not less than $2,000 each.

The permit for the work will be secured from the United States Government by the parties hereto acting jointly, and the collections obtained will be divided equally and deposited for preservation in the United States National Museum, the Royal Ontario Museum at Toronto, and the Museum of New Mexico at Santa Fe.

Should either party to the agreement fail to make its annual allotment for the expeditions, it is understood that the other two may continue the work, sharing equally the expenses and the collections obtained.

The work shall be under the direction of a commission, consisting of William H. Holmes, of the United States National Museum; F. W. Hodge, of the Bureau of American Ethnology; C. T. Currelly, of the Royal Ontario Museum; and Edgar L. Hewett, of the School of American Archæology. This commission shall have its chairman and disbursing officer, shall direct all expenditures, engage all employees, and have full charge of the scientific work of the expeditions.

Preliminary work necessary to satisfy the requirements of the Government concession shall be done under the direction of the managing commission during the year 1916, the three parties sharing the expense equally.

Approved,

C. D. WALCOTT,
For the Smithsonian Institution.
C. T. CURRELLY,
For the Royal Ontario Museum.
EDGAR L. HEWETT,
For the School of American Archæology.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If they have the authority to make that agreement, they can pay for it out of their funds. If they are bound by the laws that control public officials, they can not make any contract for the expenditure of public funds, unless it is authorized by law, until the money is appropriated.

Mr. MANN. I suppose this entire contract is contingent upon having the money. It is also true that out of this appropriation of $42,000, with all the work that is being carried on in the Bureau of American Ethnology, they can not very well take out an extra $2,000. It is a work that I am very much interested in. I hope the gentleman will see his way, under the circumstances, to agree to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the matter go over. We have no information about it.

Mr. MANN. Very well; let it go over.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The information may be furnished.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this amendment be passed over without prejudice. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKWAY COMMISSION.

To enable the commission created by section 22 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 885), to commence proceedings toward the acquisition of lands required for a connecting parkway between Potomac Park, the Zoological Park, and Rock Creek Park, $50,000, payable one-half out of the Treasury of the United States and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the total area of lands finally to be acquired for said parkway shall not exceed the area and parcels described and delineated in the map No. 2, contained in House Document No. 1114 of the present session: Provided further, That the said commission is hereby authorized to settle and compromise all questions and controversies between the United States and adverse claimants of titles to lands within or adjacent to the area desired for said parkway, in accordance with the recommendations of the said report submitted in compliance with the act of March 3, 1915, subject to the approval of the Attorney General of the United States, who may, in such settlement and compromise or in any condemnation proceedings requested by said commission, exercise the power in him conferred by section 364 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That the said lands when acquired shall be a part of the park system of the District of Columbia, subject to the provisions of section 2 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. L. ch. 543).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It may be a little bit late, but I want to ask the gentleman specifically about this Potomac Park extension. What is provided for in reference to the connection between Rock Creek Park and Potomac Park and how does it change the existing law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The public-building act is rather indefinite as to the property to be taken.

Mr. MANN. That is the one that really never did become a law, but then——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Last year $5,000 was appropriated so that actual surveys would be made and the property to be taken be actually determined. It seems that when the surveys were made it was ascertained that there would be considerable difficulty in connection with the canal.

Mr. MANN. And the gas works.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Chesapeake & Potomac Canal and the gas company's plant and some other places. The commission has been at work and has prepared a plan by which, by transfers and arrangements, the parkway can be extended to take in enough land on either side of Rock Creek to protect it and to make the connection without having any unsightly interference from these various plants.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that the public-building act would have taken a part of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal plant and also a part of the gas-works plant, which would be very expensive, and that they asked authority to make certain changes in the connecting link, so as to leave the gas works where they are, without condemning them, and so as not to interfere with the canal. Does this give that authority?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This gives authority to make certain changes and alterations. In the letter of transmittal the commission says:

The many economies shown over the former plan along the entire length of the proposed parkway are so pronounced and satisfactory as to merit our unqualified approval. Furthermore, the negotiations with the Washington Gas Light Co. and with the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co., the results of which are submitted herewith for consideration, hold forth promise of an ultimate satisfactory solution of the complicated problem affecting the project where it touches upon the holdings of those corporations.

It is especially satisfactory to note that the restudy of this problem has disclosed the possibility of reducing the amount of property to be taken by about 1,875,763 square feet, and that the Government, therefore, will need to purchase only about 58 per cent of the area needed for the parkway, the remaining 42 per cent being now owned by the United States as streets, alleys, and reservations. This will be seen in detail by consulting the list of property and the index map.

Unfortunately, the plates of maps which accompany the report and which are necessary in order to understand the plan of it must be prepared outside of any Government establishment, and the time required to advertise and get the work done has made it impossible to print the report.

Mr. MANN. Is it understood by the gentleman that under this item in the bill the changes which were recommended by the commission are authorized?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; we authorize them. This provision in the bill is intended to give the commission the authority they ask to make these changes and reduce and define the area. This situation exists: A fill has been in progress on a portion of the proposed acquisition. Application has been made to the District Commissioners to prevent the filling in of the property. The commissioners have taken the position that until the property to be taken is definitely designated it would be somewhat of an extraordinary exercise of their power to prevent an owner from filling in. The adoption of the provision in the bill fixes definitely the property to be taken, and that is really more important than the amount of the appropriation, because as soon as the property to be taken is definitely determined measures will be taken to prevent its being filled in, and the negotiations between the various companies will be continued.

Mr. MADDEN. This commission has the power to complete the negotiations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will have under this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The amount provided in the bill for carrying on the work of the commission in connection with acquiring the addition to Rock Creek Park is $50,000. I think it is regrettable that conditions were not such that the committee felt justified in appropriating a larger sum of money for this purpose. I do not disagree with the committee's conclusion in the matter; I simply regret it. This is a work that should be carried on as promptly as possible.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it be possible for them to use a greater sum than the amount appropriated until they conclude their negotiations?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the negotiations have reached the point where they can use considerably more money than the amount appropriated. It is altogether possible that there may be some hitch in the proceeding. Personally I became reconciled to the rather small sum appropriated because of that possibility. There are still some questions to be settled with the canal company. The canal company is to quitclaim all right, title, and interest to certain land if the Federal Government will quitclaim its right, title, and interest to other land. Up to the time of the hearings the Attorney General was not quite prepared to quitclaim the title to all the territory which the canal company desired. It may take a little time still to complete it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman means negotiations looking to the transfer of land from the Government to the gas company and from the gas company to the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. There is an arrangement under which the gas company grants a right of way which it was not inclined to do, with the understanding that the Federal Government would pay a part at least of the expenditure necessary for certain approaches under the right of way. There are several matters of that kind that have not up to this time been concluded.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the Secretary of the Treasury as chairman of the commission recommended an appropriation of $250,000 to be utilized for the purchase of the necessary land, and so forth. Will the gentleman tell us why the committee only recommended about one-fifth of it?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the committee was economizing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Economizing in view of the approaching election?

Mr. MONDELL. We were considering the condition of the Treasury, and although we on this side are not responsible for the condition we realize the situation.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman realize that if Mr. Hughes had had his way we would not have had any income tax and the Treasury would have been in a worse condition?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired, and the Chair will call attention to the fact that the committee is proceeding under unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to ask additional time to enlighten my Missouri friend, who, for a man as bright as he is and as apt as he is, is the densest man in regard to some matters that I ever happened to meet. He has not yet discovered that it was Gov. Hughes, Republican candidate for President, President to be after March 4 next, who pointed out the faults of the Democratic proposition for an income tax.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is surely mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. The man who drafted the income-tax law took cognizance of the objections and criticisms made by the President to be and drafted his bill in accordance therewith.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, the gentleman is much mistaken; Chief Justice Marshall pointed all that out in 1819. Gov. Hughes did not know it, but Chief Justice Marshall pointed it out 100 years ago.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Democratic Party never accepted anything that Chief Justice Marshall pointed out, except under protest—that is, it never has in the past. It may be getting around possibly now to where it will admit that Chief Justice Marshall was right, but if Hughes and Marshall agreed on this matter it speaks well for Marshall.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.
